EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been twofold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefore a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris. When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris makes available all cases back to 1658.

Each title is preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research. Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis is found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112). The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise black-letter summary, indicative of its scope, precedes the full treatment or statement of the law under each section. These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, have proven of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index is found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum is kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume. This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes conveniently, and with certainty, keeps each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined products of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill. Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

SET.

——As a Noun. The word "set" is commonly employed to indicate a collection or group of things of the same general character intended to be used together and, strictly speaking, more than two in number,[1] although it has been held that, by common usage, two articles may constitute a set.[2]

The word "set" is also applied to a tool used to receive the blows of a sledge in riveting the plates of metal beams.[3]

——As a Verb. "Set" is defined generally as meaning to seat; to fix in a situation or direction; to establish; to move with fixed direction; to put in readiness; to beset; to place in estimation; to put in a fixed state.[4]

When applied to precious stones "set" has a specific[5] and a well-known and well-defined[6] meaning, that is, to place in a frame or mounting; fasten or partially enclose, as a gem, in gold, silver, or other metal so as at once to support and display it; as, to set a ruby in a ring, hence to stud or bedeck with objects placed in some order; as, to set a crown with jewels.[7]

The verb "set" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "demise" see 26 C.J.S. p 707 note 48.1, and "fix" see 36 C.J.S. p 885 note 66.

——As an Adjective. The word "set," as an adjective, is defined as meaning fixed in position; immovable; rigid;[8] and this is said to be its primary definition.[9]

——Setting. The word "setting" is defined generally as meaning a placing, or putting in a place, condition, state, or posture.[10]

In dog parlance, the term has a somewhat technical meaning; and means standing and intently looking in one direction, the attitude also being called "pointing."[11]

Set out. The meaning of the expression "set out" when applied to substance, is to allot, to assign, to mark by boundaries or distinctions of space.[14] With respect to written instruments "set out" means to allege or aver;[15] to describe or incorporate;[16] to recite or state in full;[17] to recite or narrate facts or circumstances.[18]

The term "set out" has been held synonymous with "allege" see 3 C.J.S. p 884 note 72, and "sets out" is sometimes equivalent to "establishes" see 30 C.J.S. p 1231 note 36.1.

Set up. The term "set up" has a very wide latitude of meaning,[19] and various and comprehensive connotations,[20] but is, nevertheless, quite capable of being generally understood.[21] It is applied to a great variety of human actions, such as to set up a school, a factory, a store, a business, a standard, a banner, a government, a shout, a cry, a complaint, a scheme, a play, or a game,[22] and does not necessarily and exclusively apply to the construction or setting up of some physical object or design, but may be, and frequently is, used in a figurative sense.[23]

"To establish" usually implies more permanency than "to set up" see 30 C.J.S. p 1230 note 5.1, and "in operation" is said to have a meaning different from "set up" see 42 C J.S. p 479 note 17.

Defendant considered as plaintiff

A defendant who files a counterclaim is in reality a "plaintiff" with respect to the counterclaim asserting a separate and independent action, notwithstanding he continues to be denominated in the title of the pleadings as defendant and hence, in respect to the counterclaim, the titular plaintiff is the "defendant."—

struction placed on code or statutory provisions in some jurisdictions, it is an action,[2] or, in effect, a separate or new suit;[3] but in other jurisdictions it is held not to be an action[4] or a proceeding.[5]

Pleas of set-off and recoupment have been held to be distinct in themselves.[6] The fundamental philosophy of all set-offs and recoupments is that they are offered by a defendant in opposition to some money demand asserted by plaintiff.[7] Where defensive matter interposed by defendant constitutes an independent cause of action and does not go to the foundation of plaintiff's claim, it cannot operate as a reduction of the demand except by way of set-off or counterclaim.[8] A true cross action or counterclaim is not the same action asserted by plaintiff because of its very nature.[9]

Composition takes place between two debts by mere operation of law as soon as they exist simultaneously to the amount of the respective sums, where the debts are equally liquidated and demandable, under circumstances that, if one had brought an action against the other, a counterclaim could have been set up.[10]

§ 2. —— Recoupment

Recoupment is of common-law origin and is the act of rebating a part of a claim, on which one is sued, by means of a legal or equitable right resulting from a counterclaim arising out of the same transaction.

Recoupment is the act of rebating or recouping a part of a claim on which one is sued by means of a legal or equitable right resulting from a counterclaim arising out of the same transaction.[11] It is the right of defendant, in the same action, to claim damages from plaintiff, either because he has not complied with some cross obligation of the contract on which he sues or because he has violated some duty which the law imposed on him in the making or performance of that contract.[12] Recoupment rests on the principle that it is just and equitable to settle in one action all claims growing out of the same contract or transaction,[13] the doctrine is remedial

Object of remedy see infra § 11.

All just allowances or demands Under the doctrine of recoupment a defendant may claim, by way of deduction, all just allowances or demands accruing to him in respect of in character,[14] and is spoken of as a liberal and beneficial improvement on the old doctrine of failure of consideration[15]

While the remedy of recoupment is of common-law origin,[16] it is an innovation on the strict rules of the common-law;[17] it may be employed in equity,[18] and has been said to be equitable in its nature.[19] The right to recoup has been held not abolished by code provisions,[20] and even in states wherein the codes do not specifically mention recoupment as a form of pleading the right to recoup still exists[21] Originally the remedy was of very limited application,[22] but later it was greatly extended in its application,[23] although it has been said that the defense of recoupment has lost much of its identity under the codes and is generally embraced in the subject of counterclaim[24]

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, recoupment is purely defensive and not offensive, at least when employed in a court of law.[25] It goes to the justice[26] or existence[27] of plaintiff's claim, and only to the abatement, reduction, or mitigation of the damages claimed by plaintiff.[28] However, although it is not an independent cross claim, like a separate and distinct debt,[29] it is regarded as in the nature of a cross action,[30] wherein defendant alleges that he has been injured by a breach by plaintiff of another branch of the same contract on which the action is founded,[31] and claims to stop, cut off, or keep back as much of plaintiff's damages as will satisfy the damages which have been sustained by defendant.[32] It implies that plaintiff has a cause of action[33] and that defendant, too, has a cause of action growing out of a breach of some other part of the contract on which the action is founded, or for some other cause connected with the contract.[34] In recoupment a defendant establishes a defense only to the extent to which he proves damage, and if he produces no evidence of damage he makes no case in recoupment.[35]

§ 3. —— Set-Off in General

A set-off is a counterdemand which a defendant holds against a plaintiff, arising out of a transaction extrinsic of the plaintiff's cause of action, and the principles thereof may be applied both at law and in equity.

A set-off is a counterdemand which a defendant holds against a plaintiff, arising out of a transaction extrinsic of plaintiff's cause of action;[36] the right which exists between two parties, each of whom under an independent contract owes an ascertained amount to the other, to set off their respective debts by way of mutual deduction, so that in any action brought for the larger debt the residue only, after deduction, may be recovered.[37] It has been said that a set-off is in the nature of a cross action,[38] and constitutes a cause of action.[39] In some cases it is asserted that the right of set-off attaches to the remedy only, and not to the debt itself;[40] but in other cases it is said that the right of set-off, although first introduced as a part of the procedural law,[41] has been recognized and regarded as a matter of substantive right or justice,[42] affecting the substantive relations between the parties,[43] rather than a mere procedural convenience.[44]

The right of set-off is based on principles of right, justice, and benevolence.[45] The doctrine is remedial in character,[46] and is a mode which equity adopts to compel the ultimate payment of a debt by one who in justice, equity, and good conscience ought to pay it.[47] Set-off contemplates the right existing between two parties to set off their debts by mutual deduction.[48] It is not incompatible with the justice of plaintiff's claim but seeks to balance it in whole or in part by a counter obligation alleged to be due by plaintiff to defendant in another transaction.[49] Under the doctrine of set-off, where parties dealing together become mutually indebted, ordinarily only the balance is recoverable,[50] however, instances may arise where, under unusual circumstances, this doctrine is not applied.[51] Set-off does not require an equal balance.[52]

The broad equitable principles of set-off may be applied both at law and in equity in a proper case,[53] and courts of law and equity follow the same general doctrines on the subject.[54] Moreover, the distinction between legal and equitable set-offs is without importance in jurisdictions where equitable defenses are permitted in actions at law[55] or where both law and equity are administered in the same court.[56]

The right of set-off is an exercisable right, and not a fixed or natural right conclusively established by the mere fact that each of the parties has a claim against the other;[57] until the right is exercised, either party may do what he pleases with his property.[58] Set-off is an incident of judicial proceedings in which both parties become actors and is accomplished only by judicial action.[59]

Offset. The term "offset" is used quite commonly as a synonym of "set-off."[60] It has been defined as a contrary claim or demand by which a given claim may be lessened or canceled;[61] a demand which a defendant makes against plaintiff in the

The basic principle underlying the law of set-off is that a defendant has the right to set off against plaintiff's demand or claim any claim or demand that he may have against plaintiff extrinsic to the transaction out of which plaintiff's claim arises, where the cross demands are mutual, arise out of the same right, are due and payable, and are liquidated.—Ghingher v. Fanseen, 172 A. 75, 166 Md. 519.

Occasion for application of set-off

The occasion for set-off arises when one who is sued may have no defense to the exact cause of action sued upon, but may have a cause of action against the person suing him, and he asks the court to allow him in the same action to set up his cause against the party suing him so as to try to balance his cause against the suit filed against him, and so that the court hearing the suit containing the cause and the counter cause may determine what is the liability of each and set off one liability against the other.—Turkenkoph v. § 4. —— Statutory Set-Off

The right or remedy of set-off was unknown at common law and is purely statutory in origin.

The right or remedy of set-off in actions at law is purely statutory,[63] it was unknown at early common law,[64] according to which a defendant who had a demand against a plaintiff was compelled to resort either to his cross action or a bill in chancery,[65] except in the few instances in which the limited right of recoupment was available.[66] This condition of the law led to the enactment by statute of the remedy of set-off,[67] which was designed by allowing set-offs in actions at law to supersede, or obviate the necessity of a resort to, bills in equity for that purpose.[68]

The ancient common-law rule prohibiting the allowance of a set-off was changed in England by an early statute [69] In a few states statutes of set-off were passed before the English statute,[70] or the English statute was not adopted,[71] and in some other states set-off, as such, is not, or at least at one time was not, provided for or recognized in code or statutory provisions.[72]

English decisions construing English statutes are considered to be in point in the construction of the American statutes based thereon,[73] but in some states the statutes so differ from the English stat-

§ 5. —— Equitable Set-Off

a. In general
b. Grounds

a. In General

Equity has inherent power, as part of its general jurisdiction, and independently of statute, to allow or compel a set-off. Generally, equity will follow the law with respect to matters of set-off unless a departure from the rules obtaining in courts of law is necessary to prevent wrong and injustice.

In order to be complete, a definition of "set-off" must embrace equitable set-off.[75] A court of equity, or a court possessing equitable jurisdiction, has inherent[76] power,[77] as a part of its general jurisdiction,[78] to allow or compel a set-off. This power is independent of statutes allowing a set-off,[79] it was recognized and exercised prior to the enactment of such statutes,[80] and it has not been taken away by their enactment[81] or affected by their repeal.[82] As sometimes stated, the right of set-off is an equitable right[83] or a creature of equity,[84] and is founded on equitable principles.[85] The character

Equitable maxims
Equity has recognized right of set-off in exercise of its broad powers to prevent circuity of action, to enforce maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity, and in general to do equity between parties where such legal right of set-off as existed was not adequate to accomplish this of the demand does not determine the jurisdiction of equity to entertain a plea of set-off.[86]

Discretion. Set-off in equity is not a matter of right,[87] but rests largely in the discretion of the court[88] as defined by well-recognized equitable principles of universal application.[89]

Adequacy of remedy at law. Equity will not aid a defendant in an action at law as to matters of set-off when his legal remedies are complete and adequate,[90] but it may allow a set-off where, from the nature of the claim or situation of the parties, justice cannot be done at law.[91] The right of a court of equity to take jurisdiction to enforce a set-off extends to cases where there is an intervening equity not reached by the law;[92] and the mere fact that a party claiming an equitable set-off may by assumpsit effect a recovery on his claim and collect it by execution or other legal process does not constitute in all cases, and under all circumstances, a complete and adequate remedy at law so as to preclude relief in equity.[93]

Adherence to, or departure from, legal rules. Courts of equity, as a general rule, put the same construction on statutes of set-off as do courts of law,[94] and generally follow the law with respect to matters of set-off.[95] However, the doctrine of set-off is more flexible in equity than in law,[96] and is sometimes applied independently of the limitations which attach to legal or statutory set-offs.[97] Thus equity may allow a set-off where a relaxation of, or departure from, the rules obtaining in courts of law is necessary to prevent wrong and injustice,[98]

b. Grounds

(2) Insolvency
(3) Nonresidence

(1) In General

In general, an equitable set-off will be allowed when, and only when, the party seeking it shows some equitable ground therefor, and its allowance is necessary in order to promote justice.

Generally speaking, an equitable set-off will be allowed when the party seeking it shows some equitable ground therefor[2] and it is necessary in order to promote justice,[3] to avoid or prevent wrong or irremediable injustice,[4] or to give effect to a clear equity of the party seeking it.[5] Conversely, some ground for equitable interposition must be alleged[6] and shown,[7] and the set-off will not be allowed where it would be inequitable[8] or work in-

Superior equity of third person

A set-off will not be allowed on equitable principles if no special equity is to be subserved, especially if a superior equity of a third person will be injured.—Abrahams v. Wilson, 3 A 2d 1016, 134 Pa.Super. 297.

Profits from sale of lumber

Profits from corporation's lumber, sold by payees of corporation's notes, were held not available as equitable set-off to stockholders, liable as comakers, in absence of reason preventing payees from applying such profits on other corporate indebtedness.—Jefferson Lumber Co. v. justice,[9] or where it is not necessary to prevent irremediable injustice.[10] In dealing with the equitable right of set-off, the court looks through forms to determine the real facts and the true intention of the parties.[11]

There is some authority to the effect that the equitable grounds which will warrant overriding the statutory law have been limited to insolvency or nonresidence;[12] but it is generally held that these are not the sole grounds,[13] and other grounds are stated generally to include such a connection between the demands that one is the consideration for the other, an agreement to set them off, and a complete liquidation thereof at law.[14] Although it has been stated that there is a natural equity that cross demands should be offset against each other,[15] and that the balance only should be recovered,[16] an equitable right of set-off must be not only a natural equity, but such an equity as can be enforced by judicial action,[17] and not one arising merely from moral considerations;[18] courts of equity will not enforce any vague equities of set-off which involve no rights or interests protected by the recognized rules of justice.[19] There has been said to be no such thing as an inherent equitable right of set-off.[20] Also, a mere right of set-off is not of itself an equity;[21] it becomes one only in consequence of some additional circumstance.[22]

A set-off in equity is not authorized by the mere circumstance of mutual and independent cross demands,[23] without circumstances from which it can be inferred that one debt was contracted on the faith of the other,[24] or that there was an agreement between the parties that one debt should be deducted from, or set off against, the other,[25] or some other intervening equity which renders the interposition of a court of equity necessary for the protection of the demand sought to be set off.[26] One may not of his own election or by mere neglect, such as by a failure to assert a set-off when sued at law, create an equitable set-off in his favor.[27]

"Mutual credit," in the law of set-off, is a knowledge on both sides of an existing debt due to one party, and a credit by the other party founded on, and trusting to, such debt as a means of discharging it.[28] It differs from "mutual debts" in that it is more comprehensive.[29] An equitable set-off may be allowed where there is a mutual credit, or presumption of mutual credit, between the parties,[30] and, according to some authorities, a mutual credit is necessary to justify a set-off in equity.[31]

(2) Insolvency

The insolvency of a person against whom a set-off is claimed may be a sufficient ground for the allowance thereof, particularly where such insolvency is coupled with other matters.

The insolvency of a person against whom a set-off is claimed may be a sufficient ground for the allowance of the set-off in equity,[32] and in such case it is only the balance after the set-off which is the real or just sum owing by or to the insolvent.[33] Although some authorities have inclined to the view that mere insolvency alone does not constitute a ground for the interference of the court, and that some further equity must exist in order to induce an equity court to act,[34] other authorities take the position that insolvency is a distinct equitable ground of set-off[35] and may of itself raise an equity which will justify the interference of the court.[36] At any rate, insolvency is a material circumstance to be considered in determining whether an equitable set-off should be allowed,[37] and, when coupled with other matters, may authorize the allowance of a set-off.[38]

While it seems that in some early cases insolvency was the only ground of equitable set-off recognized,[39] nevertheless an equitable set-off may be allowed on other grounds against a party who is solvent.[40] Equity will not grant a set-off on the ground of insolvency where the allegation of insolvency is not sustained by proof.[41] Where insolvency is alleged rather as a reason for castigation than an equitable ground of relief, equity will not intervene.[42]

Insolvency of third person. The insolvency which will furnish a foundation for the allowance of an equitable set-off in cases not provided for by statute is not the insolvency of a third person, but of the debtor of the party seeking relief.[43]

Insolvency proceedings. It has been held that in insolvency proceedings the question of set-off is purely a question of equity, and that the general statutes of counterclaim and set-off, unless specially

(3) Nonresidence

In most jurisdictions the nonresidence of a party against whom a set-off is claimed is a sufficient ground for equitable interference to allow the set-off.

In a majority of jurisdictions the nonresidence of a party against whom a set-off is claimed is deemed to be a sufficient ground for equitable interference to allow the set-off;[45] but in some jurisdictions the mere fact of nonresidence unaccompanied by any other equitable condition is considered insufficient to warrant the application of the doctrine of equitable set-off.[46] Nonresidence and fraud together may be sufficient to warrant the allowance of an equitable set-off[47] The nonresidence of a company has been held not sufficient to allow a set-off where the company was authorized to do business in the state and had designated a resident agent on whom process could be served.[48]

A counterclaim has been defined as a cause of action in favor of the defendant on which he might have sued the plaintiff and obtained affirmative relief in a separate action. It is a purely statutory remedy and was not known to the common law.

The term "counterclaim" is a general and comprehensive one.[49] At times the courts have found it perplexing to define,[50] or say what constitutes,[51] a counterclaim; and sometimes the courts consider it inadvisable to attempt to define the meaning of the language employed in a statutory definition which has purposely been made comprehensive in its terms and general in its expression.[52] It is defined judicially as a cause of action in favor of defendant on which he might have sued plaintiff and obtained affirmative relief in a separate action;[53] a cause of action existing in favor of defendant against plaintiff.[54] Also, the term is defined by code or statutory provision in some states,[55] although not in other states;[56] and it is not given the same meaning in all the states.[57] The word "counterclaim" is used in some statutes in its generic sense[58] and not in a technical or distinctive sense[59]

59. Fla.—Symonds v. Browning, supra.

A counterclaim is a purely statutory remedy[60] of modern origin;[61] it was not known to the common law[62] or before the adoption of the codes,[63] and in some states there has been said to be no statute providing for a counterclaim, at least in an action at law.[64] It is substantially a cross action by defendant against plaintiff,[65] and secures to defendant the full relief which a separate action at law,[66] or in equity, as by a bill in chancery,[67] or a cross bill[68] would have secured to him on the same state of facts.

A counterclaim is not necessarily confined to the justice of plaintiff's claim, and does not seek to defeat it as a cause of action.[69] Rather, it meets plaintiff's claim by opposing to it a demand on the part of defendant to the end that a complete determination of the right to and amount of recovery may be had in the same action,[70] it represents defendant's right to have the claims of the parties counterbalanced in whole or in part, judgment to be entered for the excess, if any.[71] A counterclaim may be legal or equitable in character,[72] and in some jurisdictions is available at law[73] or in equity.[74] In other jurisdictions, however, pleading counterclaims is not permissible in actions at law, but defendant must use set-off or recoupment.[75] It has been said that a counterclaim is auxiliary to the proceeding in the original suit and depends on it.[76]

Counterclaim by plaintiff. There is no rule or practice of procedure which allows plaintiff to set up a counterclaim against defendant.[77]

"demand in reconvention" are civil-law terms,[79] and have variously been defined as, or said to be, equivalent to "counterclaim;"[80] a demand that a defendant in a suit is permitted by a courtesy of the law to engraft on the main action;[81] the demand which defendant institutes in consequence of that which plaintiff has brought against him.[82] It is in the nature of a cross action seeking equitable relief.[83] A statute providing that, where there is no express law, the judge is bound to proceed and decide according to equity is inapplicable to the filing of a reconventional demand where there is an express statute on the subject of reconventional demands.[84]

Summary actions. It has been held that a reconventional demand amounting to an ordinary action cannot be filed in a summary action instituted by plaintiff,[85] and that defendant by reconvening cannot convert a summary action into an ordinary action so as to authorize the filing of a reconventional demand.[86] In this connection, the granting of a continuance of a summary action at the request of defendant does not change an action from a summary one to an ordinary one so as to authorize the filing of a reconventional demand;[87] but where plaintiff has been granted a long continuance, thereby destroying the summary character of his proceeding, a reconventional demand may be interposed.[88]

§ 9. —— Compensation

Compensation, as used in the civil law, is the extinction of debts of which two persons are reciprocally debtors to one another, by the credits by which they are reciprocally creditors of one another; and under this doctrine the debts extinguish each other by mere operation of law to the amount of their respective sums, without any act of either party.

"Compensation" is a civil-law term[89] and is of three kinds, legal or by operation of law; compensation by way of exception; and by reconvention.[90] "Compensation" has been defined as the extinction of debts, of which two persons are reciprocally debtors to one another, by the credits by which they are reciprocally creditors of one another;[91] a reciprocal acquittal of debts between two persons who are indebted the one to the other.[92] It was founded on a natural equity which permitted the reciprocal acquittal of mutual debts.[93]

Wrongful garnishment
A plea in reconvention for damages for wrongfully procuring a writ of garnishment in aid of plaintiff's suit is a counterclaim founded on a cause of action arising out of, incident to, or connected with plaintiff's cause of action, within a statute recognizing defendant's right to plead such counterclaim in set-off. —Waldman-Ross Grain Co. v. simultaneously,[94] for clear and liquidated debts,[95] compensation takes place, under the civil law, from the moment the two debts coexist, and they extinguish each other by the mere operation of law to the amount of their respective sums,[96] without any tender or act of either party.[97] It takes place only between two debts, having equally for their object a sum of money, or a certain quantity of consumable things of one and the same kind, and which are equally liquidated and demandable.[98]

Retroactive effect Compensation, when decided by the court to be legal, has a retroactive effect to the day both debts, simultaneously existing, were liquidated, due, and demandable.[99] A plea in compensation has a retroactive effect as of the date when the parties became indebted to each other.[1]

Exceptions. Under the civil code a demand of restitution of a deposit is an exception to the rule that compensation takes place between debtors;[2] but this does not apply so as to prevent compensation or offset where the money involved does not in fact constitute a deposit.[3] A loan for use also constitutes an exception to the doctrine of compensation.[4] Further, under the code, compensation does not take place in the case of a demand of restitution of a thing of which the owner has been unjustly deprived,[5] but the word "thing" as used in such provision should not be given a strained construction,[6] and does not refer to a sum of money.[7]

Facultative compensation is compensation which operates by the will of the parties when one of them removes an obstacle resulting from the dispositions of the law.[8] It depends on the waiver by a party of the right to the protection of a statute which makes certain debts not subject to compensation.[9] In facultative compensation one of the conditions is lacking for legal compensation,[10] as where one of the two debts is not liquidated, or is suspended by a term, or involves a credit arising out of a deposit;[11] and in such cases, if the parties agree to accept in compensation the nonliquidated debt, or if the one who had the right renounces the benefit

§ 10. —— Synonymity of, and Distinctions between, Terms

The terms "set-off," "counterclaim," "recoupment," "reconvention," and "compensation" have been compared to, and distinguished from, one another.

Recoupment and set-off are distinguishable from each other[13] as to origin,[14] subject matter,[15] pleading,[16] and the judgment recoverable.[17] Also in some jurisdictions recoupment does not confess the cause of action sued on to the same extent as a plea of set-off does.[18] However, recoupment and set-off are closely[19] related,[20] and a recoupment is, in a sense, a set-off.[21] In some jurisdictions, by virtue of code or statutory provisions, there is no longer any substantial difference between the two terms,[22] and sometimes the terms are used interchangeably,[23] or one is erroneously employed when the other is obviously intended.[24]

Recoupment or set-off and reconvention or compensation. The doctrine of set-off was borrowed and derived from the doctrine of compensation in the civil law;[25] the two doctrines resemble each other and are analogous in some respects,[26] and sometimes the terms are confounded.[27] Nevertheless, the two terms are distinguishable.[28] In some instances the terms "set-off" and "reconvention" have been used interchangeably,[29] but the term "re-

Nature

Recoupment is not a set-off in the strict sense, because it is not in the nature of a cross demand, but rather lessens or defeats any recovery by plaintiff.—Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Miller, C.C.A.Tex., 124 F.2d 160, 140 A.L.R. 811, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 1047, 316 U.S. 676, 86 L.Ed. 1750.

convention" is more extensive than either recoupment or set-off.[30]

Recoupment and defalcation. In its strict legal, although perhaps less-known, sense, the term "defalcation" is synonymous with recoupment.[31]

Counterclaim and other cross demands. Subject to statutory limitations, counterclaim embraces practically every kind of cross demand[32] It resembles both recoupment[33] and set-off;[34] except in a few jurisdictions,[35] it embraces both,[36] and ordinarily is a substitute for them;[37] and sometimes the terms "counterclaim" and "set-off" are used interchangeably in a generic sense,[38] as are similarly "counterclaim" and "recoupment."[39] However, counterclaim is distinguishable from both recoupment[40] and set-off,[41] and is broader and more comprehensive than either.[42]

A counterclaim is distinguishable from a recoupment in that it is a purely statutory remedy, while recoupment is a development of the common law,[43] and, while in the case of a counterclaim defendant can recover an excess of his claim over plaintiff's, recoupment is limited to the amount of plaintiff's demand and will not authorize a judgment in de-

Statutory construction
Statutes relating to counterclaims should not be so narrowly construed as to prevent defendant invoking that available at common law as recoupment or set-off —Blog v. Burden & Co., 265 N.Y.S. 81, 238 App Div. 634.

Damages in automobile collision
In action involving automobile collision, counterclaim for damages to automobile, loss of time, expense, and mental anguish is in nature of set-off —Harriman v Roberts, 235 N W. 751, 211 Iowa 1372

Statutory provisions relating to counterclaims are measure of regulation applicable to recoupment or set-off —Blog v Burden & Co, supra

Relief previously available as set-off
(1) Under some statutes relief theretofore afforded by way of set-off is allowed as a counterclaim — Henderson v. Northwest Airlines, 43 N W 2d 786, 231 Minn 503.

(2) In action on note by bank, defendants, if they sought to allege an indebtedness to them by way of contribution from bank as a set-off, should have made the indebtedness the subject of a counterclaim —Mt Vernon Trust Co. v. Oakwood Gardens, 3 N.Y.S 2d 532, 254 App Div 686

"Set-off" defined as "counterclaim"

(2) A set-off is a counterclaim which a defendant may interpose by way of cross action against plaintiff.—American Smelting & Refining Co. v Swisshelm Gold Silver Co., 160 P.2d 757, 63 Ariz. 204.

Difference in theory
The theory of recoupment is that plaintiff's damages are cut down to an amount which will compensate him for the value of what plaintiff has given, the theory being that defendant is not bound to perform contract, but has received something of value for which he should pay, while under the statutes of counterclaim, defendant does not seek to enforce plaintiff's obligation and to deduct plaintiff's liability for breach from amount due from himself —Tripp v Renhard, 200 P.2d 644, 184 Or 622

Connection with plaintiff's cause of action
A set-off grows out of matter independent of plaintiff's cause of action, whereas a counterclaim grows out of, or is connected with, plaintiff's cause of action.—Sams v. Kern, 98 N E 2d 920, 121 Ind App. 370.

Premiums illegally collected
In action to recover premiums on public liability policy, where defendant claimed a sum alleged to have been illegally collected from it in premiums on policies issued by plaintiff in prior years, matter set up by defendant was basis of a counterclaim and not of set-off.—Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Fischer & Porter Co, 75 A.2d 8, 167 Pa Super. 448.

fendant's favor for an excess[44] Some authorities state that counterclaim and recoupment are alike in the sense that each must grow out of, or be connected with, the transaction on which plaintiff sues;[45] but other authorities state that they are unlike in that recoupment must, and counterclaim need not, be confined to the transaction sued on.[46] A recoupment has been said to be in effect a counterclaim for damages[47] or a counterclaim arising out of the contract sued on;[48] but it has also been said that a recoupment is not a counterclaim in the strict sense because it is not in the nature of a cross demand, but rather lessens or defeats any recovery by plaintiff[49]

Defense and cross demands. A defense is distinguishable from both set-off and counterclaim,[50] as well as from counterclaim alone.[51] Strictly speaking, a recoupment,[52] set-off,[53] or counterclaim[54] is not a defense, and a matter which is merely defensive is not a counterclaim.[55] However, recoupment is sometimes spoken of as a defense,[56] or at least as a partial defense,[57] or as being in the nature of a defense,[58] and the same is true of set-off[59] and counterclaim.[60] In a sense, a counterclaim is a defense,[61] but it is more than that,[62] it is an offensive as well as a defensive plea[63] Likewise, a set-off is more than a defense[64]

Claim and counterclaim. "Counterclaim" has been said to be the opposite of "claim."[65]

Discount and counterclaim, set-off, or recoup. The word "counterclaim" has been held to be synonymous with "discount."[66] "Set-off" and "discount" have been distinguished.[67] The term "recoup" has been held to be synonymous with "discount."[68]

"Reconvention" and "compensation" are distinguishable terms,[69] but in some instances they have been used interchangeably[70]

Reduction and recoupment "Reduction" is sometimes regarded or used as synonymous with "recoupment"[71] or "set-off."[72]

§ 11. —— Objects of, and Favor Shown, Remedies

In general, the common object of the various forms of cross demand, such as set-off and counterclaim, and of statutory provisions relating thereto, is to prevent a multiplicity of suits by allowing the entire controversy between the parties to be determined in one action, and to this end the statutes are given a liberal construction.

The object of a plea of recoupment is to rebate or recoup in whole or in part the claim sued on.[73] The object of a set-off is to liquidate the whole or a part of plaintiff's demand, according to the amount of the set-off,[74] or, if the amount of the set-off exceeds plaintiff's demand, obtain judgment for the excess.[75] The purpose of a counterclaim has been said to be to enable a defendant to make his defense more complete and effectual than it would be if he stood on an answer alone.[76] In general, the common object of the various forms of cross demand, such as recoupment, set-off, counterclaim, and the like,[77] and of code and statutory provisions relating thereto,[78] is to avoid and prevent circuity of action and multiplicity of suits by allowing the entire controversy between the parties to be litigated and finally determined in one action, wherever this can be done with entire justice to all parties before the court,[79] without a violation of any of the settled rules of law or forms of procedure,[80] and without great inconvenience in practice.[81]

A liberal construction should be given to the rules creating and regulating the doctrines of set-off and recoupment[82] as well as to code and statutory provisions relating to counterclaims, set-offs, or other cross demands.[83] These remedies are favored by the courts,[84] which have been disposed to extend to the greatest length compatible with the legal rights of the parties the doctrine of allowing matters to be settled in one suit rather than compel defendant to resort to his cross action,[85] and which will, where possible, relax the strict rules of pleading where a right of set-off is shown.[86]

On the other hand, the rule of liberal construction will not be carried to a point of misconstruction;[87] and it is not always permissible to settle in one suit all differences that may exist between litigants, regardless of the nature of the respective demands.[88] A set-off will not be allowed where it in itself would be the cause of new disputes,[89] promote injustice,[90] or allow a contract to be changed by one of the parties to it.[91] Defendant will not be allowed to recoup his claim unless it would be just[92] and practicable[93] to adjust it in plaintiff's action.

In the absence of a statute extending its jurisdiction, a court may entertain a set-off or counterclaim only where it would have jurisdiction to entertain the claim originally; and the cross demand must be within the jurisdiction of the court both as to subject matter and territorial limitations.

In the absence of statutory provisions extending its jurisdiction a court may entertain a counterclaim, set-off, or reconvention only where it would have jurisdiction to entertain the claim originally;[94] and the cross demand must be within the jurisdiction of the court as to subject matter[95] and territorial

Inability to coerce payment

Set-off is particularly favored if the creditor from any cause, such as sovereign immunity, cannot be coerced to pay his obligations.

limitations[96] However, a party who brings an action may thereby give the court jurisdiction over him with respect to a counterclaim although such jurisdiction would not otherwise have existed.[97]

A court having no equitable jurisdiction cannot give relief on a set-off of a purely equitable right, at least where the set-off is deemed to involve the granting of affirmative relief,[98] and a court which has nothing more than common-law jurisdiction has been held without power to entertain a plea which attempts to set off damages arising ex delicto against an action on a contract, or damages arising ex contractu against an action for tort,[99] but under statutes extending the subject matter of counterclaims to include any and all claims, legal or equitable, which defendant may have, he is not precluded from setting up a counterclaim on the ground that the court would have had no jurisdiction of an original action based on the subject matter of the claim.[1]

On appeal. If a claim exceeds the jurisdictional amount and for that reason cannot be pleaded as a set-off before the inferior court, an appellate court will not permit it to be pleaded as such on appeal from the lower court,[2] and on appeal the set-off[3] or counterclaim[4] cannot, in the appellate court, be reduced by a credit or remittitur, so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the inferior court, but will be regarded as not having been filed at all.

§ 13. Statutory Provisions and What Law Governs

a. Statutory provisions
b. What law governs

a. Statutory Provisions

Questions concerning the availability of a set-off or counterclaim as provided by statute must be determined in accordance with the language of the statute as construed in the light of its purpose.

The statutory provisions in some jurisdictions pertaining to counterclaims and crossclaims, taken together, form a comprehensive enactment intended to cover the various phases and aspects of cross claims.[5] Questions concerning the availability of a set-off or counterclaim as provided by statute must be determined in accordance with the language of the statute,[6] and any judicial construction of such a statute should be made in the light of the purpose of the statute.[7] Statutes respecting counterclaims have been held designed to enlarge previous remedies, not diminish them,[8] and the comprehensive language used in some statutes dealing with counterclaims has been held to indicate an intent on the part of the legislature to eradicate the limitations on the interposition of counterclaims which had theretofore existed, to the end that parties to a lawsuit might litigate all differences at one trial.[9]

A specific statute which is in conflict with a general counterclaim statute will control the counter-

A nonresident by bringing action in state court submitted himself to the jurisdiction of such court as to any counterclaim allowed under procedural rules and statutes of such state, and court would have jurisdiction without service of notice of counterclaim on nonresident plaintiff.—Linscott v. claim statute and constitute a limitation on the general language thereof.[10] The right to a set-off or counterclaim given by a statute is impliedly subject to statutory provisions in pari materia,[11] and, in some jurisdictions, is expressly made subject to rules, such as rules of civil procedure.[12] A statute pertaining to counterclaims is superseded by a later statute which is in conflict therewith,[13] and the enactment of a new statute relating to counterclaims will be deemed to repeal an earlier statute on the subject, notwithstanding the absence of inconsistencies between the two, where the later statute was intended to be a revision of the entire subject and was designed as a substitute for preceding statutes on the subject.[14]

Where by statute counterclaim has been substituted for the remedies of recoupment and set-off, defendant may counterclaim for any claim which he previously could have set up by way of recoupment or set-off.[15] Under some statutes any claim which could not have been set up, either as a recoupment or set-off, is not the proper subject for a counterclaim,[16] but under other statutes a counterclaim may lie even though the facts would not have permitted a recoupment or set-off under the former practice,[17] and there is no requirement that the original demand and the counterclaim shall be of the same character.[18]

Permissive or mandatory nature of statutes. Some statutes providing for the interposition of a cross demand are considered permissive only, not mandatory,[19] and defendant may assert his claim by way of set-off or counterclaim or he may bring an independent action.[20] Other statutes, however, have been held to require a defendant to litigate particular matters as a counterclaim where possible.[21]

b. What Law Governs

Set-off, counterclaim, and recoupment are governed by the law of the place where the action is brought, and not by the lex loci contractus, since they relate to the remedy and not to the right.

Laws of set-off, counterclaim, and recoupment relate to the remedy and not to the right,[22] and therefore set-off, counterclaim, and recoupment are governed by the law of the place where the action is brought and not by the lex loci contractus,[23] but the effect of the defense must be determined by the lex loci contractus.[24] The question as to the right of set-off must be determined on the law as it stood when the action was commenced,[25] and similarly the forum in which a reconventional demand may be urged depends on the conditions existing when it is filed.[26]

§ 14. Remedies as Affected by Agreement, Waiver, or Estoppel

A party may be precluded by waiver or estoppel from asserting a right which he would otherwise have to interpose a set-off or counterclaim; and the parties to an action may agree to permit a set-off which, in the absence of agreement, would not be available.

The parties to an action may agree to permit a set-off or counterclaim to be based on claims which, in the absence of agreement, could not be set off or made the basis of a counterclaim,[27] and, similarly, may agree to recoup damages which otherwise could not be recouped.[28] An agreement to allow set-off need not be express, but may be inferred from the circumstances,[29] and since courts favor the settling of disputes between the parties in one action, as discussed supra § 11, an agreement to allow set-off will be inferred from very slight circumstances.[30]

Mere willingness to set off one demand against another or even an express understanding so to do, without some new consideration to support it as a contract, cannot defeat the right of plaintiff to recover.[31] Set-off cannot be had, under a conditional agreement for the allowance thereof, if the condition is not fulfilled.[32] Where an agreement is relied on in justification of a departure from the general rules governing set-off, it must appear that the proposed set-off is embraced therein.[33] Items not otherwise available for set-off cannot be set off under a contract when not included therein.[34] Matters which could not in any event be made the subject of set-off cannot be made so by agreement.[35]

Waiver of right to interpose. A defendant may, for a valuable consideration,[36] waive the right to use a set-off or counterclaim which would otherwise be available.[37] It is generally held that waiver of set-off may be either express[38] or implied;[39] but

(3) In action of assumpsit, fact that defendant did not include claim for board in his account when he was undertaking to make friendly settlement with plaintiff did not preclude defendant from recovering such amount by way of set-off.—Joyner v. McMurphy, 163 So. 533, 26 Ala. App. 549.
(4) In action by trustee in bankruptcy to recover from employee of bankrupt corporation for overdraft in salary account, where employee's counterclaim for amount due him by reason of his interest in certain notes of bankrupt corporation had been adjudged legally sufficient and amount due on note and amount paid employee were undisputed, dismissal of counterclaim on ground that employee admitted payment of notes in his affidavit claiming that it was intended that overdraft be credited on notes was error.—Blake v. it has also been held that a defendant cannot be deprived of a right of set-off by anything less than a contract,[40] and that an agreement must be clear and specific in order to deprive a party of the ordinary right of set-off[41]

Estoppel. A defendant may, by his conduct or representations, be estopped to interpose a set-off which would be otherwise available,[42] as where he has kept silent when it was his duty to speak[43] or has influenced plaintiff by false representations;[44] but it must be shown that plaintiff has acted thereon so as to alter his position to his detriment.[45] Payment on an independent claim, when an adjudication would have shown nothing due plaintiff, does not estop defendant to assert his claim when sued.[46]

§ 15. Existence of Cause of Action of Plaintiff

It has been held that the defendant cannot assert a set-off, counterclaim, or recoupment where the existence of such cross demand depends on the nonexistence of the plaintiff's cause of action; but the rule is not universal.

It has been held that the right to a set-off[47] or counterclaim[48] depends on plaintiff having a right of action against defendant, and that, where the cause of action on which defendant's cross demand is based depends for its existence on the nonexistence of plaintiff's cause of action, defendant cannot assert his demand by way of set-off,[49] counterclaim,[50] or recoupment,[51] but the rule has been held to be otherwise as to reconvention,[52] and it has also been held that if there is an independent jurisdictional basis for a counterclaim, and the counterclaim seeks affirmative relief, it is sustainable without regard to what happens to the original complaint.[53]

§ 16. Actions in Which Remedy Available

In general, a set-off is allowed only in actions on demands which could themselves be the subject of a set-off; and in some jurisdictions a counterclaim is available only in actions in which a money judgment is sought.

While it is difficult to deduce from the decisions any universal rule as to the cases in which the remedy of set-off or counterclaim is available,[54] it is held as a broad general rule that set-off can be allowed only in actions founded on demands which could themselves be the subject of a set-off.[55] Courts are loath to exercise their discretion in favor of permitting a defendant to set up counterclaims in an action brought against him for misapplication or failure to pay moneys belonging to plaintiff.[56] It is the substance of the cause of action contained in the allegations of the complaint, and not the form of action, which determines the right of set-off.[57]

Defendant may file a counterclaim in an action for the recovery of money only;[58] and in some

Money had and received

A counterclaim may be maintained in an action for money had and received although such action is to recover money under a judgment subsequently reversed for prematurity of action where the action in which the counterclaim is filed is not the jurisdictions set-offs or counterclaims are unavailable in actions in which a money judgment is not sought,[59] as, for example, an action to declare the existence of a trust relation;[60] but other authorities do not so limit its use.[61] Some statutes have been held not to limit the right to plead a counterclaim to actions ex contractu.[62]

Within the meaning of the various statutes providing the remedy of set-off, the use of this remedy has been held allowable in probate proceedings against administrators to compel the payment of allowed claims,[63] actions to set aside the probate of a will,[64] or suits for specific performance.[65] On the other hand, set-off has been held not allowable in a scire facias action,[66] and a counterclaim sought to be interposed by the petitioners in an adoption proceeding has been held not to lie.[67] In a mechanic's lien action, under some statutory provisions and rules of court, counterclaims which theretofore would have been the subject of set-off or recoupment may be filed as compulsory counterclaims,[68] but permissive counterclaims may not be filed[69]

Possessory actions. As a general rule, a set-off or counterclaim ordinarily is not available in possessory actions[70] However, there is an exception where special circumstances exist which entitle defendant to equitable relief;[71] and a counterclaim may be interposed in such actions under the rules of civil procedure existing in some jurisdictions.[72] A counterclaim may be asserted in a proceeding which, although possessory in character, also contemplates an award of damages.[73] A counterclaim may be interposed to a count asking for injunction although another count is for replevin.[74]

§ 17. —— On Contracts in General

A recoupment, set-off, or counterclaim ordinarily is available in actions ex contractu.

Recoupment is allowed in actions ex contractu,[75] on unsealed instruments or instruments under seal.[76] Under the codes and statutes, set-offs and counterclaims are allowed in ex contractu actions,[77] and it has been held that a set-off is available only in such actions[78] Set-off is allowable in an action of assumpsit for usury,[79] or in action for wages,[80] or in actions of covenant.[81]

§ 18. —— Unliquidated Demands

Set-off is generally held unavailable in actions on unliquidated demands; but the statutes in some jurisdictions permit a set-off or counterclaim in actions on contract, whether for liquidated or unliquidated damages.

Since set-off is allowed only in actions founded on demands which could themselves be the subject of set-off, as discussed supra § 16, and since it is generally held that unliquidated demands cannot be the subject of set-off, as discussed infra § 42, the general rule is that set-off is not allowed in actions on unliquidated demands.[82] In some states, how-summary supplemental procedure provided for by statute for securing restitution after a judgment has been reversed, but is an independent action and the counterclaim is filed after the debt on which the judgment had been obtained has matured — Buckman v. Tucker, 71 P.2d 69, 9 Cal. 2d 403.

ever, the statutes, more in harmony with the object of the remedy, which is to settle cross demands in one action, wherever possible, as discussed supra § 11, permit a set-off or counterclaim in actions on contract, whether for liquidated or unliquidated damages.[83]

§ 19. —— For Penalties

Some authorities permit a set-off or counterclaim to be asserted in an action for a penalty, but other authorities do not.

According to some authorities, in an action for the recovery of a statutory penalty defendant may not interpose a set-off[84] or counterclaim.[85] Other authorities, however, have held that the penal element in a statute should not be decisive on the question of the allowance of a counterclaim, provided a jurisdictional basis is established,[86] and have permitted a set-off or counterclaim to be asserted in an action for a penalty,[87] and in some jurisdictions the rule is that such an action is considered an action in debt in which a proper claim may be set off.[88] Actions on an undertaking given to secure an attachment[89] or arrest,[90] or on an appeal bond,[91] or on official bonds,[92] or on a forthcoming bond taken under a warrant of distress,[93] have been held to be actions on contract in which counterclaims or set-offs are available. A counterclaim is available in an action to recover money derived from the collection of penalties.[94]

§ 20. —— For Taxes

In the absence of express authority, it is generally held that a set-off is unavailable in an action brought for the recovery of taxes.

In an action for taxes, set-off of an indebtedness of the state or municipality to the tax debtor will not be allowed, the statutes of set-off being construed in the light of public policy as not allowing the remedy in proceedings for this purpose[95] unless expressly authorized,[96] nor is such a claim subject to compensation;[97] and it follows with greater force that a private debt of the tax collector cannot be set off against taxes due from his creditor.[98] However, a set-off against taxes may be allowed by statute, in the absence of a constitutional prohibition,[99] or by special contract to that effect.[1]

§ 21. —— For Torts

Recoupment is generally held available in tort actions, and, under some statutes, a set-off or counterclaim may also be interposed in such actions.

Under some statutes a defendant in an action at law for a tort may file a cross claim against plaintiff for damages arising out of the same transaction.[2] Recoupment is very generally allowed in actions which are based on a ground of tort,[3] such as actions for false representations[4] or trover,[5] but it has also been held that recoupment is not available to a defendant in a trover action except in special instances, such as insolvency or nonresidence of plaintiff.[6]

Set-off. Since set-off is statutory, as discussed supra § 4, the right to set-off in an action on a tort depends on the statutes.[7] While some statutes have been construed to allow set-offs in tort actions,[8] other statutes have been construed to exclude set-off in tort actions,[9] such as an action for damages for being summarily dispossessed,[10] libel,[11] negligence,[12] nuisance,[13] trespass,[14] case,[15] or trover.[16] It has been held that, where plaintiff joins in his complaint separate paragraphs of actions on contract and tort, defendant may plead a set-off to the paragraphs on contract,[17] but not to the paragraphs in tort[18] or to the whole complaint,[19] and that if the counts on contract are discontinued defendant will not be allowed his set-off.[20]

Counterclaim. While the statutes in some jurisdictions providing the remedy of counterclaim have been held not to authorize counterclaims in actions of tort,[21] even when the counterclaim grows out of the same occurrence,[22] it is generally held that, where the subject matter of the counterclaim is proper, the fact that a cause of action alleged in the complaint sounds in tort is no obstacle to setting up a counterclaim thereto in the answer,[23] and thus counterclaims are very generally allowed in tort actions such as actions for conversion[24] or fraud.[25] Counterclaims have also been allowed in actions of trespass where the subject matter is proper.[26]

Reconvention. In an action for tort defendant may reconvene a demand connected with or growing out of the transaction sued on.[27]

Waiver of tort. Where a plaintiff who can sue in tort waives the tort and sues on contract, the action is considered an action on contract, within the meaning of statutes allowing set-offs[28] or counterclaims[29] in actions on contracts, and the courts, in following their inclination to settle all disputes between the parties in one action whenever practicable, will construe liberally plaintiff's pleadings to have effected a waiver of the tort, if such a construction is reasonably possible.[30] Where the facts pleaded by plaintiff would constitute an action for tort, but also constitute an action on contract, a set-off may be interposed.[31]

§ 22. Set-Off or Counterclaim against Set-Off or Counterclaim

In a proper case a claim may be allowed as a set-off against a counterclaim.

A claim may be allowed as a set-off against a counterclaim[32] or a cross complaint[33] in a proper case.

II. SUBJECT MATTER

§ 23. Nature of Indebtedness or Liability in General

The claims which may properly be made the subject of a cross demand such as set-off, counterclaim, compensation, or reconvention depend on the statutes in force as they have been interpreted by the courts, and generally, every claim must have a fair legal or equitable basis to be the subject of recoupment or set-off.

Defendant may set off against plaintiff's claim any claim defendant has against plaintiff extrinsic to transaction out of which plaintiff's claim arises, where cross demands are mutual, arise out of same right, are due and payable, and are liquidated.—Ghingher v. Fanseen, 172 A. 75, 166 Md. 519.

Nature of cause

Whether a cause of action is of such character as to constitute the proper basis of a set-off is to be determined from the nature of the cause as contemplated and defined by statute.—Mutual Sav. Life Ins. Co. v. Osborne, 23 So.2d 867, 247 Ala. 252.

Or.—Wiggins v. Hendrickson, 229 P. 2d 652, 191 Or. 285.

"Claim"

Under the statute respecting counterclaims, the word "claim" does not refer to the form of the action but to the underlying facts combined with the law giving a party a right to a remedy of one form or another based on the claim, it is not essential that the claim which the statute requires to be stated as a counterclaim should seek the same relief as the opposing party's claims.—Cantrell v. City of Caruthersville, 221 S.W.2d 471, 359 Mo. 282.

Cross complaint

Insurer's cross complaint to cancel for fraud life policy sued on was a "counterclaim" within statute permitting pleading of as many grounds of defense, "counterclaim" and set-off, whether legal or equitable, as defendant may have.—Federal Life Ins. Co. v. Relias, 185 N.E. 319, 99 Ind. App. 115.

Legal nature of counterclaim

(1) Counterclaim of legal nature may be interposed in equity proceeding.—First Nat. Bank v. Erling Bros., 249 N.W. 681, 61 S.D. 364, 89 A.L.R. 1387.

(2) Legal issues may be brought in by way of counterclaim or cross complaint, even though the complaint pleads a purely equitable cause of action.—Crouser v. Boice, 124 P.2d 358, 51 Cal. App. 2d 198.

(3) The statute regarding counterclaims permits practically any counterclaim of any name or nature, whether legal or equitable, to be interposed by defendant to a plaintiff's cause of action.—Village of Fleischmanns v. Silberman, 15 N.Y.S.2d 904.

(3) In action by wife of vendee to restrain conditional vendor from removing furnace from house of wife in which it was installed, counterclaim for conversion of the furnace.—Swanson v. Rock Island Stove Co., 31 N.E.2d 85, 308 Ill. App. 315.

(4) In vendor's action for specific performance of land contract, wherein vendor could not prevail because her title was defective, counterclaim by purchaser for amount paid by purchaser on the contract as a deposit together with agreed value of the title search and counsel fees constituting a sum which was fixed and readily determinable.—Welhaven v. Kohn, 15 N.Y.S.2d 183, 257 App. Div. 744, affirmed 26 N.E.2d 821, 282 N.Y. 705, reargument denied 29 N.E.2d 395, 284 N.Y. 575.

compensation,[36] and reconvention,[37] which were unknown at common law and exist to-day only by virtue or under the authority of statutory provisions, claims which may properly be made the subject of a cross demand depend on the statutes in force as they have been interpreted by the courts; and it has been said that the diversity in the decisions of the courts of the different states as to which claims are proper set-offs or counterclaims arises, from the diversity in the language of their respective statutes of set-off and counterclaim.[38] Unless the claim is embraced within the provisions of the statutes, as such provisions have been interpreted, the remedy is denied,[39] and in particular cases the assertion of certain matter in set-off[40] or as a counterclaim[41] has been held improper. Ordinarily the statutes are given a liberal interpretation, as discussed § 11, but it has been held inadvisable to devise a rule for the determination of what constitutes proper subject matter which will fit all cases which may arise in the future.[42]

Generally, damages may be set off for which a cross action would lie at the time of pleading them.[43] However, every claim must have a fair legal or equitable basis to be the subject of recoupment or set-off,[44] and a set-off[45] or counterclaim[46] will not be allowed where it would result in a double recovery for defendant; nor, in some jurisdictions, will a counterclaim be allowed where it tends to prejudice and embarrass the fair trial of plaintiff's action.[47] Whether or not a counterclaim, provided for by statute, extends to subject matter which previously could have been set up by way of recoupment or set-off, or is limited to such subject matter, is discussed supra § 13.

It has been held that the common-law equitable defense of recoupment usually invoked to establish failure of consideration is unavailable to a defendant whose sole effort is to recover personal property and not its value.[48] Nominal damages may not be

(2) In suit by owner of real estate by prescription to quiet title against claims of former owner, defendant could not assert his record title as counterclaim or set-off —McGowan v. Carlton, 288 P. 338, 143 Okl. 106.

Expenses

In an action to recover the difference between the amount paid defendant for land and the amount defendant actually paid therefor, such payment being made on defendant's agreement that he would transfer the property to plaintiff for the amount that he paid for it, and his representation as to what that amount was, defendant should not be allowed to set off against the damages of plaintiff an amount which he claims to have paid out as expenses —Jameson v. recovered in recoupment.[49]

§ 24. Tendency to Defeat or Diminish Plaintiff's Claim

Under some statutory provisions, a counterclaim must tend to diminish or defeat plaintiff's recovery, and to have such effect it must be such that it resists or modifies some state of facts in, or impairs, affects, or qualifies, at least in some degree, plaintiff's cause of action, and is antagonistic thereto.

Under the statutes in some of the states it is expressly provided that a counterclaim must tend to diminish or defeat plaintiff's recovery; and where, by virtue either of such specific statutory provisions or, in their absence, of the recognition of a similar requirement as existing under the statutes creating and defining counterclaims, such a principle is established, a cross demand not so tending does not constitute and is not allowed as a counterclaim.[50] In order to have that effect it must be such that it resists or modifies some state of facts in,[51] or impairs, affects, or qualifies, at least in some degree,[52] plaintiff's cause of action, and is antagonistic thereto;[53] but a claim insufficient on this ground to constitute a counterclaim may be such as to constitute an equity in defendant.[54] Under some statutes, however, counterclaims may be filed against plaintiff or a codefendant without regard to the effect it may have on plaintiff's demand.[55]

Under the rule requiring that a counterclaim have a tendency to defeat or diminish plaintiff's claim, a proposed counterclaim which shows that plaintiff's alleged claim has not in fact any existence is held not to be a counterclaim;[56] nor is a claim which cannot be proved until it is shown that plaintiff had no claim;[57] nor one which seeks the same relief as that sought by plaintiff.[58]

Money demands in actions for equitable relief. It has been held that, where plaintiff seeks an injunction, defendant cannot counterclaim for damages for breach of contract since if plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction the recovery by defendant of a money judgment against plaintiffs would not in any way tend to defeat or diminish plaintiffs' right to an injunction,[59] and the same has been held as to money demands asserted in a counterclaim by defendant in actions for mortgage foreclosure without any demand for a deficiency judgment,[60] for partition and accounting,[61] to quiet title to real es-

Damages for conversion
Bank was held entitled to assert demand for damages for conversion of automobiles, sold by corporation president after executing bills of sale thereof to bank as security for loans to corporation, by way of counterclaim in action by corporation's creditor against bank as trustee for creditors to recover plaintiff's share of proceeds of execution sale, since such demand tends to diminish or defeat plaintiff's recovery.—Thomsen v. In stockholders' derivative action, fact that counterclaims of defendant corporations against individual plaintiff, if successful, would bring additional benefits to the corporations in whose behalf plaintiff was suing would not make them proper as "counterclaims," since this circumstance would tend to show that they were parallel claims and not counterclaims.—Binon v. § 25. Subsisting Right of Action of Defendant

Generally, a party cannot avail himself of certain matter as a set-off, counterclaim, claim in recoupment, or reconventional demand, unless it is a legally subsisting cause of action in his favor on which he could maintain an independent action.

As a general rule, a party cannot avail himself of certain matter as a set-off, unless it is a legally subsisting cause of action in his favor on which he could maintain an independent action,[65] and the same rule applies where defendant in the action endeavors to set up his alleged claim by way of recoupment,[66] or where he sets up a claim by way of counterclaim,[67] or where he sets up claim by

Neither legal nor equitable set-off can exist unless there are actually two demands or claims in existence, that is, a claim by plaintiff and a claim by defendant.—White v. Bevilacqua, 7 N.E.2d 134, 273 N.Y. 282.

Payment of debt of another

(1) Maker of note could not set off amount paid to third person as debt of payee without proof that maker paid money at payee's request or that payee acknowledged amounts paid over as his indebtedness.—Carter v. First Trust & Savings Bank, 144 So. 885, 107 Fla. 360

(2) In subcontractor's action for balance due on contract for concrete and cement work, rejection of set-off for sums due subcontractor's creditors on ground that subcontractor directed contractor to pay creditors and deduct sums so paid from sums due subcontractor was not error, where at date of trial contractor had not paid such sums and one of subcontractor's creditors had commenced suit against him to recover amount due it.—Massiah v. In employee's suit against railroad for injuries wherein recovery was sought for decrease in earning power from filing of suit, railroad was not entitled to set-off of the amounts paid to employee for medical and hospital bills and for lost time, since suit was not for doctors' or hospital bills and payments were voluntary.—Gay v. Completeness

(1) A counterclaim must be complete in itself.—Wilson v. Tromly, 84 N.E.2d 177, 336 Ill.App. 403, affirmed 89 N.E.2d 22, 404 Ill. 307.

Tex.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Nolan, Civ.App., 107 S.W.2d 1116.

The statutory amendment, defining counterclaim as any cause of action in favor of defendants against plaintiffs, did not remove requirement that counterclaim be cause of action in existence when counterclaim is interposed.—Atlantic Gulf & West In-

way of compensation,[68] or reconvention;[69] but some decisions have held that the test of the propriety of forcing a set-off lies, not in the right to sue, but in the right to assert one's cross demands in the suit brought against him by the other.[70] Conversely, a set-off is valid if the substance of the facts alleged, standing alone, would constitute a cause of action by defendant against plaintiff.[71] Although matter may not be interposed as a set-off because no action could be maintained thereon, it may still be available by way of defense.[72]

Merger of claim in judgment. Where defendant's claim is merged in a judgment, the claim cannot be set off[73] or counterclaimed,[74] but, if a judgment on a claim is a final judgment, it is a set-off as a judgment.[75]

§ 26. —— Void or Unenforceable Claims

Generally, only such demands may be set off as constitute valid and enforceable obligations at the time; a demand growing out of an illegal transaction and which, therefore, cannot be recovered or enforced directly cannot be set off, counterclaimed, or reconvened.

As a general rule, only such demands may be set off as constitute valid and enforceable obligations at the time.[76] Accordingly, a demand growing out of an illegal transaction and which, therefore, cannot be recovered or enforced directly cannot be set off,[77] counterclaimed,[78] or reconvened.[79] Likewise, a contract which is void under the statute of frauds, discussed in Frauds, Statute of § 225, or because of coverture,[80] or because unsupported by a consideration,[81] or, generally, a contract barred by the statute of limitations, as discussed in Limitations of Actions § 106, cannot be the subject of a set-off; and neither can a contract unenforceable by reason of defendant's disregard of conditions precedent to the allowance of damages thereunder[82] or a judgment which has been superseded and is pending on appeal.[83] A set-off is not maintainable where defendant could not have maintained an action thereon because of laches,[84] and a note, the collection of which has been enjoined, cannot be set off.[85] Where the gravamen of the set-off, however, is that defendant has been deceived by means of plaintiff's fraud, recovery may be allowed therefor notwithstanding plaintiff's fraudulent representations were made with respect to a matter within the statute of frauds;[86] and a claim for services rendered under an illegal contract, but which has been adjusted and allowed by the parties in a settlement, is available as a set-off.[87]

§ 27. —— Claims Nonexistent at Commencement of Action in General

A debt or demand must, as a general rule, have existed at the commencement of the action in order to be available as a set-off, counterclaim, or recoupment; but the rule is otherwise under some statutory provisions.

A debt or demand must, as a general rule, have existed at the commencement of the action in order to be available as a set-off,[88] or, likewise, in order to be available as a counterclaim,[89] or, although there is some authority to the contrary,[90] recoupment.[91] It is not required, however, that the set-off have been a legal subsisting claim at the time the right of action accrued to plaintiff on his claim in suit.[92] Under some statutory provisions, on the other hand, a counterclaim need not have existed at the time of commencement of the action in order to be asserted.[93] Although there is some authority to the contrary,[94] under a statute requiring a counterclaim to be first, a cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim or connected with the subject of the action, or second, in an action on contract, any other cause of action on contract existing at the commencement of the action, counterclaims under the first subdivision need not have existed at the commencement of the action,[95] although it is otherwise as to claims falling under the second.[96]

Under a statute providing that defendant may at the trial prove and have allowed against the debt sued for any payment or set-off described in his plea or in an account filed therewith as to give plaintiff notice of its nature but not otherwise, defendant may offset such accounts acquired before trial, whether he acquired them before or after commencement of the action.[97] Where the vendee of land has agreed to pay, as part of the purchase money, the costs recovered in a suit against the vendor, the amount of such costs cannot be set off in an action to enforce the vendor's lien where no part of it has been paid.[98]

Special agreement. The parties may, by special agreement, provide that a claim accruing subsequent to the commencement of the action may be set off[99]

On removal of suit from one court to another, where such removal is not a continuation of the suit in the original court, defendant may set off against plaintiff a claim arising after the commencement of the suit but prior to its removal.[1]

Supplemental pleading

The code section providing that a counterclaim must be an existing one in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff and existing when the action was begun, so far as it requires that the counterclaim be an existing one at the time it was started, is superseded by subsequent code section providing that a claim, which either matured or was acquired by the pleader after serving his pleading may, with the permission of the court, be presented as a counterclaim by supplemental pleading —Neyens v. Donato, 188 P.2d 588, 67 Ariz. 2.

Commencement of action. The general rule that an amended declaration or complaint which does not introduce a new cause of action relates back to the original commencement of the action has been applied in determining the time of commencement with respect to the validity of a counterclaim,[2] and a counterclaim based on a judgment obtained after the first, but before a later, amendment to plaintiff's complaint has been held not in existence at the time of action where the subsequent amendment merely stated the same cause of action as the original complaint.[3] Although there is authority to the contrary,[4] damages incident to the institution of the action do not constitute a cause of action existing at the commencement of plaintiff's action within the meaning of the statutes and cannot, therefore, be counterclaimed[5] or reconvened.[6]

§ 28. —— Inchoate and Contingent Claims

Although the remedy may temporarily be suspended so that no action can be maintained, if a good cause of action exists, it may be used as a set-off. Ordinarily defendant cannot plead as a set-off a contingent liability, where the circumstances on which the liability is contingent have not yet occurred.

A distinction is sometimes drawn between the cause of action and the remedy by action, and it is accordingly held that, although the remedy may temporarily be suspended so that no action can be maintained, if a good cause of action exists, it may be used as a set-off,[7] and although, where a demand is a condition precedent to the existence of a valid legal claim as distinguished from a right to sue thereon, a demand must have been made before the commencement of the action, in order that the claim can be set off[8] or counterclaimed,[9] where a cause of action exists without a demand, the claim may be set off, although no action can be brought without a demand.[10] So a claim of a liquidated nature which would support an action without a previous demand is a proper subject of a set-off without a demand.[11] The same rule applies to other conditions precedent to bringing an action as distinguished from conditions precedent to the existence of a valid legal claim,[12] and where presentment of a claim to a designated body for auditing or allowance is a condition precedent to existence of a cause of action thereon, failure so to present it precludes offsetting it in an action.[13]

Although defendant has been allowed in equity to set off a contingent liability where plaintiff was insolvent,[14] ordinarily defendant cannot plead as a set-off a contingent liability, where the circumstances on which the liability is contingent have not occurred.[15] Likewise, it is improper to counterclaim for a possible future contingent liability.[16] So defendant cannot, in an action by his servant for wages, recoup, or counterclaim damages for plaintiff's negligence before defendant has paid or been adjudged liable to pay damages therefor, as discussed in Master and Servant § 126; and where defendant has transferred his demand against plaintiff to a third person as collateral security for a debt of defendant to the latter, he may not set off such demand in plaintiff's action against him.[17] A

§ 29. —— Claims Not Yet Due at Commencement of Action

a. In general

b. Rule in equity

a. In General

Generally, a demand of defendant against plaintiff not due at the commencement of the action cannot be made the subject of a set-off, counterclaim, compensation, or reconvention; but defendant may set off a demand not due until after suit brought, if he has made an agreement with plaintiff to that effect, or if a statute so permits.

As a general rule, a demand of defendant against plaintiff not due at the commencement of the action cannot be set off,[19] and the same rule applies to counterclaim,[20] compensation,[21] and, although there is authority to the contrary,[22] reconvention [23] Defendant may, however, set off a demand not due until after suit brought, if he has made an agreement with plaintiff to that effect,[24] or if a statute so permits.[25] So, under a statute permitting a set-

Due and payable

A debt, in order to be available as a set-off, must be both due and payable, since the word "due" does not always import that debt is payable.—Otto v Lincoln Sav Bank of Brooklyn, 51 N.Y S 2d 561, 268 App.Div. 400, affirmed 62 N.E.2d 236, 294 N.Y. 798.

Insolvency

(2) In order to prevent injustice, exception may be made to general rule that set-off is permitted only where both debts are due and payable, where one party is insolvent and other will lose part or all of his claim if debt to insolvent is paid in full, provided rights of third parties are not adversely affected and there exists no superior equity.—Hartford Nat Bank & Trust Co. v Riverside Trust Co., 167 A. 811, 117 Conn 276

(3) It has been held, however, that creditor cannot set off claim immediately payable against unmatured debt even as against insolvent debtor—Kurtz v County Nat. Bank of Clearfield, 136 A 739, 288 Pa. 472, 51 A L R 1475.

Citizens Bank of Erwin, 97 S.W.2d 665, 20 Tenn App. 268

(2) Automobile dealers could not set off against their liability on two notes transferred to solvent corporation engaged in buying similar obligations from dealers, their right to a reserve fund held by corporation as security for dealers' indebtedness, where dealers were indebted to corporation on other notes and reserve agreement provided that no payments should be made from reserve funds while any indebtedness of dealers were unpaid.—Cullum v. Assignment for benefit of creditors

Under statute allowing debtor to set off, against any indebtedness owing to creditor making assignment for benefit of creditors, amount matured or unmatured owing debtor, unmatured trade acceptance discounted by bank was an "unmatured indebtedness," within the statute, since a "debt" is founded on a contract, express or implied, to pay money in a certain sum or which can readily be reduced to a certainty, as distinguished from a claim for damages arising out of breach of contract or the violation of duty.—In re Margolis & Meadow, 299 N.Y.S. 873, 252 App.Div. 513.

off only in actions for money demands on contract and requiring it to consist of matter arising out of a debt, duty, or contract, liquidated or not, held by defendant at the time the suit was commenced, and matured at or before the time it is offered as a set-off, it is not necessary that the matter of set-off be due at the commencement of the action,[26] and under a statute requiring a counterclaim to consist of a cause of action in favor of defendant and against plaintiff which the former "might have brought when suit was commenced, or which was then held, either matured or not, if matured when so pleaded," defendant may counterclaim an obligation due him by plaintiff which was positively imposed at the commencement of the action, although the time of payment of which was dependent on demand, such demand having been made after institution of the action, but before counterclaim pleaded.[27]

The right to attach for a debt not yet due, on the ground of a fraudulent conveyance of property by the debtor, does not give an immediate right of action on the debt, so as to render it available as a set-off.[28] In an action for breach of a contract whereby plaintiff was granted exclusive privileges, which contract provided that defendant was to receive a stipulated percentage of the rent of privileges subleased, defendant may, in the absence of proof that it was uncollectable, counterclaim his interest in a note received for the sublease, notwithstanding such note was uncollected.[29] Where plaintiff has, by transferring a note to the return of which defendant was entitled, imposed on the latter the obligation of paying it, the amount thereof may be set off in plaintiff's action subsequently brought notwithstanding defendant did not pay any money on such note until after the commencement of the action.[30]

Book account. If part of a book account is due before action brought, the whole may be counterclaimed, although the balance became due after suit brought, on the ground that an account is entire and cannot be subdivided.[31]

Insolvent estates. Where after a suit commenced by an administrator the estate of his intestate is regarded insolvent, defendant may set off a note against the intestate not due when the action was commenced,[32] although falling due pending the suit.[33] This does not, however, stand on the law regulating set-off generally, but on the law respecting the settlement of insolvent estates [34]

Suretyship obligation. A surety who pays the secured debt after commencement of an action against him by the principal cannot set off that payment in such action,[35] and, if a surety for a debt pays it before it is due, the payment will, after the debt has become due but not before, be a legal set-off against his note payable to the principal, and held by him.[36]

Maturity of claim. A judgment is matured, within the meaning of a statute requiring a set-off to be matured at or before the time it is offered as a set-off, although the time of stay of execution has not expired, and a stay was obtained.[37]

Puis darrein continuance. Although a debt not subsisting at the commencement of the action cannot be set off, if the debt subsist at that time, but be not demandable or due until after the commencement of the action, it may then be taken advantage of by a plea puis darrein continuance.[38]

b. Rule in Equity

A debt due at a future time cannot as a general rule be set off in equity against a debt presently due; but a right of equitable set-off ordinarily attaches where mutual demands exist and insolvency has intervened, even though one of the demands has not yet matured.

A debt due at a future time cannot as a general rule be set off in equity against a debt presently due;[39] and equity has no power to prevent a party

Absence of special equity

In a suit by the receiver of an incorporated club against a member on an account stated, a counterclaim on an unmatured note of the club could not be interposed under the claimed jurisdiction of the court to hear counterclaims of an equitable nature where there was no showing that the claim would not have been paid, no special equity requiring set-off was shown, and it was not shown that one debt was contracted on the faith of the other.—Kemp v. Black, 10 N.E. 2d 835, 291 Ill.App. 616.

from collecting at law a debt due him because he owes to defendant a debt not due which defendant may not be able to collect when it is due, if this fund is not stayed in his hands.[40] A right of equitable set-off ordinarily attaches, however, where mutual demands exist and insolvency has intervened, even though one of the demands has not yet matured,[41] although such right is not absolute or paramount to superior equities of other claimants.[42] So, according to some decisions, equity will allow a set-off if the claim of the party asserting it against an insolvent has matured, even though the claim of the insolvent against the party asserting the set-off has not yet matured,[43] but, if the debt due to the party claiming the set-off has not matured, he is not at liberty to offset it against the debt which he owes to an insolvent.[44] In some decisions, however, it has been said that there can be no set-off of an unmatured demand in cases of insolvency.[45]

§ 30. —— Pendency of Another Action Relating to Same Claim

Pendency of another action for a claim offered as a cross demand has been held not to affect the right of plaintiff in the former action to interpose, when sued by defendant in the former action, such claim in recoupment, set-off, counterclaim, or reconvention; but other decisions hold that such a cross demand cannot avail if it appears that an action is then pending for the same cause, and, in successive actions by the same plaintiff, defendant may not ordinarily interpose the same set-off or counterclaim.

It is held, in some cases, that pendency of another action for a claim offered as a cross demand does not affect the right of plaintiff in the former action to interpose, when sued by defendant in the former action, such claim in recoupment,[46] set-off,[47] counterclaim,[48] or reconvention,[49] even after verdict in the former action,[50] or after judgment from which an appeal is pending.[51] It has been held, however, that defendant may not obtain an affirmative judgment on his counterclaim, but can only use it as a defense,[52] and, where both actions shall have been put at issue, if it shall then appear that both causes of action may be tried on their merits in either suit, the court may, in its discretion, stay one until the trial of that which involves the whole merits has been disposed of,[53] or defendant may be compelled to elect between his own suit and the recoupment[54] or counterclaim[55] set up, and, if he choose the latter, his own suit may be stayed. Also, the counterclaim in the second suit will be dismissed

Proof of insolvency

(1) Insolvency permitting a creditor to set off unmatured indebtedness owing to insolvent person need only be proven in fact.—Thomas v. National Bank of New Jersey, 198 A. 539, 16 N.J.Misc. 271.

(2) It has been held, however, that insolvency in fact, not confessed or found, will not support set-off of unmatured debt against matured one.—Sullivan v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 144 A. 34, 108 Conn. 497.

Exercise prior to insolvency

A creditor's set-off of an unmatured debt owing to insolvent person, exercised prior to insolvency, cannot be validated by a later finding of insolvency.—Thomas v. National Bank of New Jersey, 198 A. 539, 16 N.J.Misc. 271.

Insolvent bank as trustee

Beneficiary of trust funds which were held by insolvent bank as trustee and were invested in participating shares of mortgage pool was held not entitled to set off claim against banks against beneficiary's indebtedness on mortgage executed to bank which was placed in pool, since claim was not due, and, because insolvent bank was only a trustee, there was no question involved of insolvency of one of two mutual obligors.—Appeal of Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh, 188 A. 200, 324 Pa. 161, 107 A.L.R. 1453.

where such course of action is necessary to avoid the possibility of double recovery, leaving available the remedy of consolidation to avoid unnecessary multiplicity of suits.[56] Defendant will be deemed to have waived his counterclaim in the second action where he also pleads as a defense to that action the pendency of the prior action which he neither asks nor offers to discontinue.[57]

Other decisions have followed the rule that a demand in set-off cannot avail if it appears that an action is then pending for the same cause,[58] and the same rule has been applied to counterclaim,[59] reconvention,[60] and compensation.[61] These cases take the ground that as a set-off is in the nature of a cross action, defendant cannot be permitted to carry on two suits for the same cause of action at the same time, or to split up his cause of action which, by introducing the offset, he would in effect do,[62] and that plaintiff may reply to defendant's set-off matter which, if he were defendant, he could set up by a plea in abatement, namely, the pendency of a former action.[63] So, although a judgment against plaintiff in the former action, appeal of which is pending, may not be a good defense in bar of his set-off in the subsequent suit,[64] it is a good defense in abatement.[65]

In successive actions by same plaintiff, defendant may not interpose the same set-off[66] or counterclaim,[67] except that, where the counterclaim is pleaded as a defense, it may properly be interposed as such in the second action.[68] Defendant may be required to elect in which suit his counterclaim shall be pleaded.[69] Where a set-off is pleaded in successive actions, however, defendant may introduce evidence to show that the verdict in the previous case could not legally operate as a bar to his defense in the subsequent action.[70]

§ 31. Necessity That Recoupment Be Based on Plaintiff's Default

Defendant in an action on a contract may recoup only such damages as were caused by plaintiff's default.

The damages which defendant in an action on a contract may recoup are only such as were caused by plaintiff's default.[71]

§ 32. Necessity That Record Protect Plaintiff from Further Litigation

An account may be set off at law only where it is of such a character that, when the case is properly settled, the record will show what was determined, and protect plaintiff from further litigation on the same subject matter.

In order to entitle defendant to set off an account at law, it must be of such a character that, when the case is properly settled, the record will show what was determined, and protect plaintiff from further litigation on the same subject matter.[72]

§ 33. Arising Out of Same Transaction

Claims arising out of the same transaction may constitute a proper basis for a cross demand, such as set-off, recoupment, or counterclaim, where other statutory requisites exist.

Claims arising out of the same transaction may constitute a proper basis for a cross demand, such as set-off, recoupment, or counterclaim, where other statutory requisites exist.[73] On the other hand, except as otherwise provided by statute, cross demands, such as counterclaim, recoupment, or reconvention, ordinarily are not properly pleaded where they do not arise out of the same contract or transaction as that constituting the basis of plain-tiff's claim, as discussed infra §§ 34, 36, 37, and are unrelated to the subject matter of such claim, infra §§ 38-40, although the rule is otherwise as to set-off, infra § 35. It has been broadly held, however, that cross demands, whether arising out of the same or wholly disconnected transactions, may be enforced whenever the circumstances are such as to warrant the interference of equity to prevent wrong and injustice.[74] The requirement that a cross complaint or cross petition arise out of the same transaction as that involved in the main cause of action is considered in Pleading §§ 167, 168.

§ 34. —— Recoupment

a. Necessity and propriety
b. Sufficiency

a. Necessity and Propriety

In recoupment, defendant's claim must arise out of the same contract or transaction as that on which plaintiff's cause of action is founded

In recoupment defendant's claim must arise out of the same contract or transaction as that on which plaintiff's cause of action is founded,[75] or be connected with the subject of the action, as discussed infra § 39. Thus, if defendant's claim springs out of the contract or transaction on which plaintiff seeks recovery, it may be recouped,[76] but defendant cannot recoup for matters not connected with the subject matter of plaintiff's claim, and which are founded on an independent and distinct contract or transaction.[77]

b. Sufficiency

Whether or not the matter presented by the cross action of recoupment grew out of the plaintiff's demand so as to be allowable depends on the facts of the particular case. Generally, recoupment is available for the recovery of damages suffered by defendant from any fraud, breach of warranty, or negligence of complainant growing out of and relating to the transaction on which complainant's suit is founded, and is not restricted to a claim actually arising from the particular contract sued on.

Whether or not the matter presented by the cross action of recoupment grew out of plaintiff's demand so as to be allowable depends on the facts of the particular case,[78] and in this respect, the entire transaction, requiring the things agreed to be done on each side as the condition passing between the parties, must be considered.[79] Under some statutes, the subject matter of recoupment is narrowly limited, being confined to claims arising directly from the particular contract sued on,[80] but in many jurisdictions a broader view is taken so that instead of being narrowly confined to the purpose of abating the contract price of goods sold or work done, recoupment is available for the recovery of damages suffered by defendant from any fraud, breach of warranty, or negligence of complainant growing out of and relating to the transaction on which complainant's suit is founded [81]

Breach of contract or duty imposed by law

In order to support plea in recoupment, defendant must claim damages for plaintiff's breach either of con-

If plaintiff's action is based on a contract, as a general rule it is not necessary that the claim which defendant seeks to recoup should actually arise from the particular contract sued on,[82] but it is sufficient if defendant's claim arises out of the same subject matter,[83] and the claims are susceptible of adjustment in one action.[84] So, if plaintiff sues on one part of a contract, consisting of mutual stipulations made at the same time and relating to the same subject matter, defendant may recoup damages arising from the breach of another part, whether the different parts are contained in one instrument or several,[85] and whether one part is in writing and the other part by parol,[86] and although the written part is under seal.[87] However, the mere fact that by one transaction defendant came under obligation to enter into another,[88] or that both agreements are contained in one instrument,[89] does not make them the same.

Plaintiff cannot deprive defendant of his right to recoup by declaring on the common counts instead of declaring on the express contract.[90] So, in an action on a quantum meruit for labor done under a special contract, which has not been substantially performed by plaintiff on his part, damages growing out of the nonperformance of the special contract, which do not enter into the contract price, may be recouped,[91] but, where the implied contract declared on is in fact a different contract from that out of which the damages sought to be recouped arose, the claim of recoupment is excluded [92] The fact that the parties disagree as to the terms of the contract does not prevent defendant from recouping a proper claim thereunder,[93] but, where plaintiff sues on a contract, defendant cannot show that the contract does not exist, prove another and different contract than the one sued on, and recoup damages for a breach of such contract.[94]

In accordance with the foregoing rules, if the basis of plaintiff's action is a contract, defendant may recoup any damages which have resulted to him because of a breach thereof by plaintiff,[95] whether plaintiff's breach was of a duty expressly or impliedly imposed by the contract,[96] or was of a contract made at the same time and constituting a part and parcel of the same transaction.[97] Thus, recoupment of damages is allowed defendant in cases where plaintiff, who has only partially performed tract sued on, or of some duty imposed by law by virtue of such contract; and fraudulent procurement of money in settlement of loss under contract different from one sued on is not matter in recoupment, but of set-off —Fidelity-Phenix Fire Ins Co. of New York v. Murphy, 146 So 387, 226 Ala. 226.

Defective materials and workmanship

(1) Claim for damages for defective materials and workmanship furnished under building contract affords basis for action of assumpsit against contractor, and may be set up as defense by way of recoupment in action brought by contractor to collect contract price.—Thibault v. Lambert, supra.

(2) In action on open account for machinery and parts, pleas of recoupment for defective machinery and parts unsuitable for use were held available, since they grew out of demand sued on —Neely v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg Co., 165 So. 114, 174 Miss. 519.

Suit on debt

When a plaintiff sues on a debt evidenced by a check given in payment thereof, it is competent for defendant, by cross action, to set up a contract under terms of which debt was incurred and to recoup damages whether or not they exceeded in amount those of plaintiff, incurred by breach of another obligation of contract by plaintiff.—Alpharetta Feed & Poultry Co v. his portion of the contract, comes into court asking compensation for such partial performance.[98] So, in an action for work, labor, and services, if it appears that the work was not performed in a skillful and workmanlike manner, the amount of damages to defendant may be recouped,[99] as may damages for any other failure substantially to comply with the contract,[1] and in an action by a telegraph company for tolls for transmitting messages, defendant may recoup for damages from delay in delivering one of such messages.[2] If, however, the services are accepted, expressly or impliedly, as a full performance of the contract, defendant cannot recoup for improper performance.[3]

A bailor, when sued on a contract, may recoup for plaintiff's breach or improper performance of the contract.[4] Defendant, in an action on a promissory note, may recoup for claims growing out of the transaction of which the note was a part,[5] or for a tort growing out of plaintiff's breach of the contract for which the notes were given,[6] but defendant is not entitled to recoup the amount of damages arising from the use of actionable words by plaintiff because of defendant's failure to pay the note, since the plea of recoupment is, in such circumstances, an independent tort unconnected with plaintiff's cause of action.[7] In an action on a debt for which collateral has been given, defendant may recoup the value of any of such collateral which has been converted.[8]

Defendant may recoup for fraud or deceit which induced the making of a contract,[9] and, conversely, in an action for deceit, defendant may recoup any sum due him under the contract involved.[10] So, also, in an action by one partner against another for the amount agreed to be paid for his share of the firm assets after dissolution, defendant can recoup for any damages sustained by the fraud of plaintiff in that he concealed and did not account for certain credits which he had received.[11] In trover or conversion, defendant may recoup the amount of a lien on the goods converted for freight earned in carrying them,[12] or he may recoup the debt owed him by plaintiff for the sale price of the goods converted.[13] A claim arising on an executory contract of sale is separate and distinct from a demand predicated on a temporary injunction bond and cannot be recouped against such demand.[14]

Overpayments. Recoupment will lie for overpayments.[15]

In a suit to reform a contract. by a nonresident plaintiff, defendant cannot recoup damages for independent torts.[16]

§ 35. —— Set-Off

Generally, in set-off, it is not necessary that the defendant's claim arise from the contract or transaction sued on or be connected with the subject matter thereof.

Although there are some decisions of an apparently contrary nature,[17] it is generally the rule

Claim for taxes
In suit by state for gross produc-

that in set-off it is not necessary that defendant's claim arise from the contract or transaction sued on or be connected with the subject matter thereof.[18] So as a general rule statutes of set-off are construed to allow the right of set-off of all mutual debts and demands between the parties, whether independent and unconnected with plaintiff's cause of action,[19] or springing from, and connected with, the contractual transaction on which plaintiff's claim is based.[20] However, it has been held under some statutes that the right of set-off is limited to debts or demands growing out of a transaction independent of the contract or transaction sued on.[21] In an action by an execution debtor on an indemnity bond given the sheriff for damages for the levy on, and sale of, exempt property, the amount of the original tion taxes, together with interest and penalties, tax debtor's claim for amount of gross production taxes which debtor had paid, but did not owe, for a prior period was not an off-set claim which grew out of the subject matter of the suit and hence would not be allowed —State v Humble Oil & Refining Co., 169 S.W.2d 707, 141 Tex. 46.

Claim prior in time

In lessees' action for specific performance and damages, lessor was held not entitled to offset architect's fees against lessees' deposit where plans on which fees were based were completed before lease.—Schuman v Reily, 17 P.2d 163, 128 Cal App 315

Statutory plea in effect one of recoupment

A special plea of set-off, in effect a statutory plea of recoupment, and an enlargement of the common-law right of recoupment, is available under some statutes only when the claim sought to be set off grows out of the contract sued on.—Odessky v. Monterey Wine Co., 49 S.E.2d 330, 188 Va. 184.

judgment cannot be set off.[22]

In equity a set-off is not confined to matters arising out of the contract or transaction sued on.[23] Accordingly, cross demands and counterclaims, whether arising out of the same or wholly disconnected transactions may be enforced by way of set-off whenever the circumstances are such as to warrant the interference of equity to prevent wrong and injustice,[24] but not where it would be inequitable to allow the set-off.[25]

In trespass. In an action for a wrongful and malicious trespass by defendant a transaction wholly apart and separate from plaintiff's claim cannot be set off.[26]

§ 36. —— Counterclaim

a In general
b. What constitutes "arising from same contract or transaction"
c. Particular subjects of counterclaim

a. In General

The distinguishing feature of counterclaim, as opposed to set-off, is that it arises out of the same transaction as that described in the complaint, and under some statutes, although not under others, a counterclaim ordinarily is authorized only where the claim arises out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim or is connected with the subject of the action.

As a general rule, the distinguishing feature of counterclaim, as opposed to set-off, is that it arises out of the same transaction as that described in the complaint,[27] and the propriety of a counterclaim may depend on compliance with such condition under the provisions of numerous statutes presently or formerly in force, setting forth the circumstances under which counterclaims may be allowed.[28] Under statutory provisions presently or formerly in effect authorizing as a counterclaim a cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim or connected with the subject of the action, three classes of counterclaims are provided for: (1) A demand which arises out of the contract on which plaintiff has based his action. (2) A demand which arises out of the transaction—a broader term than contract—on which plaintiff has based his action. (3) A demand which need not necessarily arise out of either the contract or the transaction involved in the action, but is sufficient if it is connected with the subject of the action.[29] Under these statutes defendant cannot set up any and every cause of action he may have against

Existence of intervening equity

(1) Court of equity will set off mutual and independent demands against each other where intervening equity exists which renders it necessary for protection of demand sought to be set off.—Hall v. Clark, 151 So. 415, 227 Ala. 571.

(2) Equity does not generally allow set-off arising from unrelated transaction unless there is some equity, such as insolvency or nonresidence.—Sinclair Refining Co. v. Midland Oil Co., C.C.A.N.C., 55 F.2d 42.

Connection with subject of action as authorizing counterclaim regardless of whether arising out of same transaction see infra § 40.

Test

Under statute, the test of whether a counterclaim is properly interposed is whether the cause of action asserted therein arises out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as the foundation of plaintiff's claim or is connected with subject of the action.—Scott v. Shackleford, Mo.App., 125 S.W.2d 522.

Purpose of statutes defining causes of action which may be pleaded as counterclaims is to permit trial in one action of all causes of action arising out of any one contract or any transaction.—Hancaminon v. Carr, 47 S.E.2d 614, 229 N.C. 52.

Settlement of independent disputes

Counterclaim statute goes beyond common-law system of pleading and practice and gives power to settle two independent disputes between same parties in action.—Bourne v. Board of Financial Control for Buncombe County, 176 S.E. 306, 207 N.C. 170.

plaintiff,[30] but he can counterclaim only such as are allowed by the statutes.[31]

Where a counterclaim is sought to be interposed under provisions of this nature it must arise out of the subject matter of plaintiff's action[32] or be connected therewith[33] or related thereto.[34] Thus in such case if a claim arises in favor of defendant out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim,[35] or is connected with the subject of the action, discussed infra § 40, it may be counterclaimed whatever its nature,[36] whether or not arising out of contract,[37] but claims which neither arise out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim,[38] nor are connected with the subject of the action, as discussed infra § 40, cannot be counterclaimed under these provisions. Where, however, a counterclaim is set up not under such provisions but under another provision authorizing as a counterclaim in an action arising on contract another cause of action arising also on contract or some provision of similar

"Subject matter"

Under a statute requiring a claim to be stated as a counterclaim if it arises out of the transaction or occurrences which are the "subject matter" of the opposing party's claim, the "subject matter of an action" is not a phrase which can mean but one thing in whatever position it be placed, but it may be applied to different things, tangible or intangible under the same circumstances, and it is not the "cause of action" nor the "object of the action," but describes physical facts in relation to which the suit is prosecuted.—Cantrell v. Single subject of controversy

In order to permit the pleading of an action as a counterclaim, there must be only one subject of controversy, it is not sufficient merely that a connected story may be told or merely that there is historical sequence.—Hancammon v. Carr, 47 S.E. 2d 614, 229 N.C. 52.

effect, it need not be a claim arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim or connected with the subject matter thereof, but any contract claim, whether or not connected with plaintiff's claim, may be counterclaimed, as discussed infra § 41.

Against codefendant. The rule that the counterclaim must arise out of, or be connected with, the subject matter of plaintiff's cause of action applies to a counterclaim set up by one defendant against a codefendant.[39]

Statutes not requiring claims to arise out of same transaction. Various statutes, some of which supersede earlier statutes establishing a different rule, broadly authorize the interposition of counterclaims without regard to whether defendant's claim arises out of the same transaction as plaintiff's demand,[40] or is connected with the subject of the action, as discussed infra § 40, as where it is only required that the counterclaim tend to defeat or diminish plaintiff's claim and consist of a claim of defendant against plaintiff as between whom a several judgment could be given.[41] Under some provisions of this nature, the only test imposed is whether the counterclaim may be conveniently and justly determined in connection with plaintiff's cause of action,[42] and the application of such test may in certain circumstances render it improper to try in the single action a counterclaim based on a wholly separate transaction.[43]

In equity the court will not dismiss a counterclaim which is shown to be just and compel claimant to institute another proceeding in order to obtain the relief to which he is clearly entitled and which can be granted in a suit between the same parties then in court, even though such counterclaim does not arise out of the same transaction,[44] nor will equity dismiss a counterclaim whether arising out of the same or wholly disconnected transactions if the circumstances are such as to warrant its interference to prevent wrong and injustice.[45]

b. What Constitutes "Arising from Same Contract or Transaction"

Whether the respective claims asserted by the parties arise out of the same contract or transaction within the limitation on counterclaims imposed by the statutes depends on a consideration of all the facts brought forth by the parties and on a determination of whether there is some legal or equitable relationship between the ground of recovery alleged in the counterclaim and the matters alleged as the cause of action by the plaintiff.

In determining whether the respective claims asserted by the parties arise out of the same contract or transaction, within the limitation on counterclaims imposed by statutes discussed supra subdivision a of this section, the court is not confined to the facts stated by plaintiff, but may take into account the facts set up by defendant, and will from them all determine whether the claims arise out of the same transaction.[46] The question must be determined as each case is presented with a view to promoting justice and dispatching litigated business.[47] A rule which arbitrarily uses the element of time to determine whether various causes of action arise out of the same contract or transaction is im-

57 C.J. p. 403 note 67.

Permissive counterclaim

Under statute so providing, there may be asserted as a permissive counterclaim any matured claim against an adverse party, not arising out of transaction or occurrence which is the subject matter of the adverse party's claim, which the party had at the time of the filing of his first required pleading.—Turner v. Alton Banking & Trust Co., C.C.A. Mo., 166 F.2d 305.

Distinct cause of action

In action on notes, defendant was not confined to defend on notes mentioned in complaint but was entitled to litigate validity of all notes and other instruments involved in his alleged dealings with plaintiff and could interpose a counterclaim on a distinct cause of action even though it was broader than, and inclusive of, plaintiff's claim.—Perlman v. Claim for salary

In action by union to secure possession of union books and records and for damages for detention of property, defendant's claim for back salary on ground that union had breached contract of employment was proper subject of counterclaim.—Elevator Operators and Starters' Union, Local No. 117 of San Francisco v. proper.[48] There must be some legal or equitable relationship between the ground of recovery alleged in the counterclaim and the matters alleged as the cause of action by plaintiff.[49] It is not enough that the parties are the same[50] or that the transactions were made on the same day.[51] The counterclaim must be such that it could reasonably have been anticipated when the transaction set up as the foundation of plaintiff's claim culminated.[52] A counterclaim is allowable where the whole matter arises out of one connected series of transactions.[53]

"Transaction" defined. A "transaction" within the statutes as to counterclaims is defined as the act of transacting or conducting any business, negotiation, management, or proceeding.[54] The word, as used in the counterclaim statutes, is broad and comprehensive,[55] and is construed liberally[56] and according to its natural and ordinary signification.[57] In other words, the term is not a technical one and must be construed according to the context and to approved usage.[58] It is broader in meaning than "contract"[59] or "tort,"[60] and it may include either or both.[61] It means any act as affecting legal rights or obligations,[62] and properly embraces an entire occurrence[63] out of which a legal right springs or on which a legal obligation is predicated,[64] although it has been held that the term is not synonymous with "accident" or "occurrence."[65]

The term "transaction" as used in the counterclaim statutes has been said to mean that combination of acts and events, circumstances and defaults, which viewed in one aspect results in plaintiff's right of action, and viewed in another aspect results in defendant's right of action;[66] and it applies to any dealings of the parties resulting in wrong, without regard to whether the wrong was done by violence, neglect, or breach of contract.[67] It cannot be restricted to the simple statement of the wrong complained of by plaintiff, but it must be held to include all the facts and circumstances out of which arose the injury complained of.[68] Where the facts alleged in a counterclaim arise out of the

All that takes place

"Transaction," within statute, authorizing defendant to file as counterclaims all causes of action which he may possess against plaintiff arising out of contract or "transaction" set forth in complaint, includes all that takes place in conducting of any item of business or an affair.—Benton County State Bank v. Nichols, supra.

same transaction as alleged in the complaint, such facts may cover a wider scope than where plaintiff's action is based on a specific contract.[69]

c. Particular Subjects of Counterclaim

Numerous particular counterclaims have been held maintainable or have been held not maintainable within the limitation imposed by statutes authorizing as a counterclaim a cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, as in actions founded on contract generally, on a note, or on a tort claim.

Under the statutory provisions authorizing as a counterclaim a cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, numerous particular counterclaims have been held maintainable as within the limitation imposed[70] or have been held not maintainable because not in compliance with the statute.[71] In an action founded on a contract, defendant may counterclaim for claims he has against plaintiff which are founded on the contract sued on[72] or which arise out of a transaction of which the contract sued on is a part.[73] So, in an action on a contract, defendant may counterclaim for plaintiff's breach of the contract sued on,[74] or for damages for fraud inducing the contract,[75] or for specific performance of the contract sued on.[76]

Defendant, in an action by plaintiff for damages for breach of contract, can counterclaim for damages for a breach of the same contract by plaintiff[77] or he may recover by counterclaim for part performance of the contract by which plaintiff profited.[78] In an action based on fraud in the inducement of a contract, defendant may counterclaim for plaintiff's breach thereof.[79] Where an agreement is not canceled by a second agreement with respect to the same thing, but is incorporated in, and becomes a part of, it, any damages accruing to the promisor in the latter agreement by reason of breach of the first agreement may, in an action by the promisee, be counterclaimed as a claim arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim or connected with the subject of the action,[80] but if the second agreement takes the place of the first the rule is otherwise.[81]

In an action to cancel a contract on the ground of fraud, defendant may counterclaim for moneys due under the contract.[82]

Action on appeal bond. In an action on an appeal bond, it is not proper to set up counterclaims based on a tort liability which did not arise out of the bond or the giving of it, and which was not connected with the bond.[83] In an action on an appeal bond given by defendant widow in a suit by heirs to recover property alleged to belong to the estate, defendant cannot counterclaim for her allowance as widow or her interest in the estate.[84]

In action to recover a bond, defendant may counterclaim for money paid to plaintiff under the contract under which the bond sued for was placed in defendant's possession.[85]

In action on note. In an action on a note, defendant may counterclaim for damages growing out of the transaction of which the note was a part,[86] such as for damages for false representations inducing defendant to sign the note,[87] but defendant may not counterclaim for damages arising from an independent transaction.[88] In an action on a note secured by a mortgage, the notes and mortgage are part of the same transaction,[89] and any cause of action growing out of defendant's rights under the mortgage may be counterclaimed.[90]

Tort actions The rule that defendant may plead a counterclaim for damages arising out of the same transaction as that involved in plaintiff's demand,[91] but not for damages arising out of a different transaction,[92] applies in actions in tort for damages. So, in an action for assault and battery, defendant may counterclaim for a libel or slander which was the cause of the assault;[93] but other cases hold that in such an action defendant cannot counterclaim for a libel of himself by plaintiff.[94] In an action for conversion, a counterclaim having such a close relation to, and connection with, the matters alleged in the petition that it would be only just and equitable between the parties to settle them all in the one action is proper;[95] but in an action by a tenant against the landlord for the conversion of chattels placed on the premises defendant cannot set up as a counterclaim that he has a lien on the chattels as security for rent.[96] In an action for defendant's negligence in driving a vehicle against plaintiff's vehicle, defendant may counterclaim for plaintiff's negligence in driving against defendant.[97]

In an action for libel or slander, it has been held that defendant can set up as a counterclaim only such acts or declarations on the part of plaintiff as are connected with the acts or transaction constituting the basis of plaintiff's cause of action,[98] and where the answer is by way of a general denial a counterclaim for slander alleged to have been uttered by plaintiff shortly before the day mentioned in the complaint cannot be set up, since the denial shows that there is no connection between the two.[99] In an action for libel defendant cannot set up as a proper counterclaim slanderous words uttered by plaintiff before and after the alleged libel, at least where there is no connection between the libel and the slanders, and where the libel was not provoked by the slanderous utterances of plaintiff.[1] A cause of action for alienation of affections cannot be set up as a counterclaim to the action for defamation unless it appears that the cause of action for alienation of affections arose out the same transaction.[2]

§ 37. —— Reconvention and Compensation

The defendant may claim in reconvention only claims arising out of the same contract or transaction which affords the ground of suit, and if his demand is not connected with, and incidental to, the main demand ordinarily it cannot be reconvened. Demands in compensation must be connected

(2) Where plaintiffs' petition, seeking recovery of proceeds of fraternal benefit insurance from defendant, also alleged ownership of parcel of land by inheritance, with prayer to be sent into possession, defendant's title and ownership of buildings situated on such land and right to occupy buildings during her natural life held proper subject of reconventional demand.—Succession of Stevenson, La.App., 158 So. 33.

(3) Purchaser's main demand for damages for failure to obtain possession of premises and vendor's reconventional demand for resolution of sale for nonpayment of purchase price were connected with, and incidental to, one another, as required by statute.—Frantom v. Rusca, La.App., 182 So. 331.

reconvened.[5] Thus rule is applicable, under particular statutory provisions, if plaintiff and defendant reside in the same parish,[6] but if a plaintiff resides out of the state,[7] or within the state but in a different parish,[8] defendant may institute a demand in reconvention against plaintiff for any cause, although such demand is not necessarily connected with, or incidental to, the main cause of action.

In determining whether defendant's claim is proper to plead in reconvention, the court is not limited to the facts stated by plaintiff, but may consider the facts stated by defendant.[9] In an action on a note, defendant may set up in reconvention matters of which the note formed a part and by which damages were inflicted by plaintiff on defendant.[10] Claims which arise out of the proceedings resorted to by plaintiff in order to enforce his legal rights are not necessarily connected with, and incidental to, the cause of action set forth in plaintiff's petition.[11]

Compensation. Demands in compensation must be connected.[12] In an action to require defendants to sign and live up to a lease in which defendants by a counter complaint claim the value of improvements made on the property, plaintiff may claim under compensation for the rent of the property occupied by defendants.[13]

§ 38. Connection with Subject of Action

Generally, new matter not germane to the original subject matter of a suit may not over objection be gated in that action.

As a general rule, independent and unrelated causes of action cannot be litigated by cross action,[14] that is, new matter not germane to the original subject matter of a suit may not over objection be litigated in that action;[15] and, under particular statutes so providing, a cross demand such as a counterclaim may not be interposed where it is not connected with the subject of the action brought by plaintiff, and is not otherwise permissible by virtue of other provisions of law, as discussed infra § 40. However, in set-off it is usually not necessary that defendant's claim be connected with the subject matter of the claim sued on, as discussed supra § 35.

Generally, if the claim of the defendant is connected with the subject of the action, it may be recouped.

As a general rule, if the claim of defendant is connected with the subject of the action, it may be recouped,[16] but if defendant's claim is legally distinct from the contract sued on, close connection with it in point of time is not sufficient to allow it to be recouped.[17]

t is generally a necessary element of a counterclaim t it grow out of, or be connected with, the cause of ion asserted by the plaintiff, and, where a statute au- rizes as a counterclaim a cause of action connected th the subject of the plaintiff's action, a counterclaim hich meets such requirement may be allowed while a ounterclaim which does not have the requisite connec- ion and is not otherwise permissible by law will not be llowed.

It has been generally held that a necessary element of a counterclaim is that it grow out of, or be connected with, the cause of action asserted by plaintiff,[18] and without reference to any statute it has been held that a counterclaim not germane to the issue involved in plaintiff's suit may not be maintained.[19] So, under some practice, a defendant by counterclaim cannot bring in for adjudication any matter which is not so connected with the matter in controversy under the original complaint that its consideration by the court is necessary to a full determination of the rights of the parties as to such matter in controversy, or, if it is of a wholly independent character, is a claim on plaintiff by way of set-off.[20] Moreover, connection with the subject of plaintiff's action or absence thereof may affect the propriety of a counterclaim where, as discussed supra § 36, the statutes presently or formerly in force authorize as a counterclaim a cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim or "connected with the subject of the action."

Under such statutes, if defendant's claim is connected with the subject of plaintiff's cause of action, it is proper subject matter for a counterclaim,[21] whatever its nature,[22] whether or not it arises out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint,[23] and although based on a stipulation different from the one sued on.[24] On the other hand, if the counterclaim set up by defendant does not arise out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, as discussed supra § 36, and is not connected with the subject of the action,[25] it is not proper under statutory provisions authorizing it in such cases.

Numerous particular counterclaims have been al-

tend to defeat or diminish plaintiff's claim and consist of a claim of defendant against plaintiff as between whom a several judgment could be given[33] or that the counterclaim be such as may be conveniently and justly determined in connection with plaintiff's cause of action.[34] However, even in jurisdictions where such statutes prevail, a counterclaim which has nothing in common with plaintiff's action may in certain circumstances be disallowed.[35]

b. "Subject of the Action" Defined

The words "subject of the action" as used in statutes authorizing counterclaims connected with the subject of the action should be construed liberally with a view to settling disputes in one action as far as possible, and may be defined as the plaintiff's principal primary right, to enforce or maintain which the action is brought, and as the facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action; the term has a broader meaning than "cause of action."

While it has been said that the words "subject of the action" as used in statutes authorizing counterclaims "connected with the subject of the action" are of rather indefinite meaning,[36] it has been held that they should be construed liberally with a view to settling disputes in one action as far as possible.[37] The "subject of the action" is not the same as the "cause of action;"[38] it has a broader meaning[39] and should be distinguished therefrom.[40] The "subject of the action" has been defined as plaintiff's principal primary right, to enforce or maintain which the action is brought,[41] and as the facts constituting plaintiff's cause of action.[42]

As to whether it may also denote the specific physical thing with respect to which the legal controversy is carried on, there is a diversity of opinion. Thus in some cases it is held that the subject of an action is the thing or subject matter to which the litigation pertains,[43] or that it may be regarded as either the property involved or a right alleged to have been violated;[44] but in other cases it has been construed as relating not to the thing itself about which the controversy has arisen, but rather to the origin and ground of plaintiff's right to obtain the relief asked.[45] However, even in cases where the courts consider the thing as the subject of the action in determining whether defendant's counterclaim is connected therewith, it appears that each party is claiming rights in the thing in controversy, which, if established, will defeat or materially affect the rights therein claimed by the other;[46] and where there is no conflict or intermingling of interests the fact that the cause of action set up by each party involves the same physical thing is not sufficient to connect them within the meaning of the statutes.[47] In an action in which plaintiff claims ownership to certain chattels or sonalty, in view of removal by statute of previous requirement that counterclaim be connected with plaintiff's cause of action.—Dorfman v Dorfman, 77 N.Y S.2d 267, 191 Misc 227—Saxon v Saxon, 36 N.Y S 2d 488, 178 Misc. 781.

Other statement of rule

The phrase "subject of the action," as used in statutes dealing with joinder of causes of action and counterclaims, means the thing in respect of which plaintiff's right of action is asserted, whether it be specific property, a contract, or a threatened or violated right.—Hancammon v. Carr, 47 S E 2d 614, 229 N C. 52.

realty, a counterclaim in which defendant asserts ownership or special property therein in himself is connected with the subject of the action.[48]

c. What Constitutes Connection with Subject of Action

It is difficult to construe the phrase "connected with the subject of the action," as used in statutes authorizing counterclaims, so that any definite rule can be derived therefrom, but a connection of claims may be shown from their originating in the same contract, or transaction, or both, involving some right or interest in the subject of the action; the connection must be immediate and direct.

In determining whether defendant's claim is connected with the subject of plaintiff's action, so as to be a proper counterclaim under statutes imposing such a limitation, the courts have found difficulty, so much so, in fact, that it has been asserted difficult to construe the phrase "connected with the subject of the action" so that any explicit and definite rule can be extracted therefrom,[49] since the word "connected" may have a broad signification, and the connection may be slight or intimate, remote or near.[50] The question must be determined as each case is presented with a view to promoting justice and dispatching litigated business.[51]

A rule sometimes followed for determining the required connection is that the counterclaim must have such a relation to, and connection with, the subject of the action that it will be just and equitable that the controversy between the parties as to the matters alleged in the complaint and in the counterclaim should be settled in one action and by one litigation, and that the claim of the one should be offset against, or applied on, the claim of the other.[52] However, some connection between the claims themselves, independent of their being held by the parties to the action, is required, which may be shown from their originating in the same contract, or transaction, or both, involving some right or interest in the subject of the action.[53]

The connection must not be casual or incidental;[54] it must be immediate and direct,[55] such as may be assumed to have been contemplated by the parties in their dealings with each other.[56] The mere fact that the subject matter of defendant's claim grew out of the subject matter of plaintiff's action does not establish a sufficient connection rendering the counterclaim proper,[57] but there must be agreement between such subjects in interest or substance or similarity of causes, and such subjects must be germane.[58] Also, the mere fact that defendant sets up acts on the part of plaintiff which are prejudicial to the rights of defendant, and that he alleges that these prejudicial acts on plaintiff's part are the reason defendant committed the acts complained of by plaintiff, does not constitute such a connection with the subject of plaintiff's cause of action as to make such acts pleadable as a counterclaim.[59] Where the facts set up by defendant constitute a defense to plaintiff's claim, they are connected with the subject of the action.[60]

§ 41. Character of Claim as on Contract or in Tort

a Recoupment
b Set-off
c. Counterclaim
d. Reconvention and compensation

a. Recoupment

Tort claims as well as contract claims are proper subjects for recoupment, and it is ordinarily not necessary that the opposing claims should be of the same character

Provided they satisfy other requirements essential to assertion of the right of recoupment, either contract or tort claims may, as a general rule, be recouped,[61] and, ordinarily, it is not essential that the opposing claims should be of the same character.[62]

Claims arising out of contract. Thus, defendant may recoup a contractual obligation against a contractual obligation,[63] and he may recoup a contract claim against a tort claim.[64] However, in some jurisdictions defendant cannot recoup a liability arising under a contract against an action sounding in tort,[65] except where equitable principles are involved, such as insolvency or nonresidence of plaintiff;[66] and, hence, in such jurisdictions, in an action of trover, a claim for damages arising from a breach of contract cannot be recouped if plaintiff's action of trover runs its course to the end as an action at law,[67] but, if defendant by an equitable answer changes plaintiff's action into a proceeding in equity, such claim can be recouped.[68]

Claims arising out of tort. Recoupment is allowed of claims arising out of tort as well as of those arising out of contract.[69] So, as a general rule, defendant may recoup a tort claim against a tort claim,[70] or a tort claim against a contract claim.[71] However, in some jurisdictions defendant cannot recoup a liability in tort against a suit maintained on a contract,[72] except where equitable principles are involved, such as insolvency or nonresidence of plaintiff.[73] It has been held that there can be no recoupment in an action for libel by showing another libel which provoked that sued on, since the two libels cannot be said to arise from the the same transaction.[74]

b. Set-Off

(1) Claims based on contract
(2) Claims based on tort

(1) Claims Based on Contract

Provided other requirements of set-off are complied with, any cause of action arising from contract may ordinarily be asserted as a set-off in an action based on contract; but, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, a contract claim cannot ordinarily be asserted as a set-off in an action based on tort.

Under some statutes set-off must be founded on a contract, express or implied, or a judgment,[75] and a purely statutory claim does not satisfy the requirement.[76] In an action founded on a contract, where the other requirements of set-off are complied with, any cause of action arising from contract may ordinarily constitute a set-off,[77] even though it arises from a contract totally distinct from the one sued on.[78] Thus, set-off of a cause of action arising on contract has been allowed in an action on a note[79] or draft,[80] and it may be allowed where it is based on a claim for contribution;[81] but in order for the contract to be the basis of a set-off, it must satisfy the general requirements as to requisites and validity of contracts.[82] The right to maintain indebitatus assumpsit for a claim is a test in favor of its allowance as a set-off,[83] and the rule is sometimes stated that a set-off must be such a claim as defendant could have maintained an action of assumpsit or debt for,[84] or that it must arise on contract.[85] So, whenever the party offering the set-off could maintain debt or indebitatus assumpsit on the claim against his adversary, if it existed at the commencement of the suit, it is a proper subject of set-off.[86]

A cause of action founded on an implied contract may ordinarily be the subject of set-off.[87] Thus, liability as for money had and received,[88] money paid for plaintiff's use and benefit,[89] or money paid under a mistake of fact,[90] is a proper subject of set-off; and the same has been held as to a claim based on a statute making persons organizing a company and transacting business in its name before the minimum capital stock has been subscribed for liable to creditors to make good the minimum capital stock with interest.[91] Some courts, however, draw a distinction between implied contracts and constructive or quasi contracts, and hold, under a statute providing that a claim, to be available as a set-off, must have arisen on judgment or on contract, express or implied, that claims arising from constructive or quasi contracts are not the subject of set-off.[92] There is authority to the effect that, in an action of debt, damages arising on a special contract cannot be set off.[93]

In tort action. In accordance with the general rule that excludes set-off in actions sounding in tort, as discussed supra § 21, in the absence of statutes permitting it,[94] a claim on a contract is not allowable to defendant as a set-off to a claim based on a tort,[95] at least where the contractual claim is unconnected with the tort claim;[96] and this applies as well to claims founded on implied contracts.[97] It has been held, however, that since an action for deceit in inducing a contract ratifies the contract, as discussed in Fraud § 63, in such an action defendant is entitled to set off any sum due him under the contract.[98]

(2) Claims Based on Tort

(a) In general

(b) In equity

(c) Waiver of tort

(a) In General

Generally speaking, claims arising out of tort cannot be set off against plaintiff's cause of action.

Although in a few jurisdictions statutes are construed to permit set-off of matters sounding in tort under certain circumstances,[99] statutes of set-off generally, and more particularly those framed only to allow set-off of debts and demands, are usually construed as excluding set-off of claims arising in tort,[1] at least where such claims do not arise out of, and are not incident to, the demand or transaction sued on,[2] and even, according to some authorities, where such claims relate to the subject matter of plaintiff's cause of action.[3] Accordingly, set-off has been disallowed as to claims arising out of as-

Action other than on indebtedness

Under a statute allowing a set-off against "any indebtedness" to plaintiff, plaintiff's claim for money unlawfully and without consideration diverted from plaintiff's assignor was not for a "debt," hence defendant could not set off against such claim an amount claimed to be due from plaintiff.—Fistere v. Janapoll, 272 N. Y. S. 332, 241 App. Div. 353.

Action other than on contract

Where guarantee company purchased mortgages from trust company at excessive price through fraud of common directorate, and subsequently became insolvent, trust company was not entitled to set-off of its claims against guarantee company in action by rehabilitator of guarantee company for purchase price, despite fact that form of action brought by rehabilitator was on contract, since debt was not really contractual.—Pink v. In Alabama

(1) Under express provision of the statute, mutual debts, liquidated or unliquidated, demands not sounding in damages merely, subsisting between the parties at the commencement of the suit, whether arising ex contractu or ex delicto, may be set off one against the other by defendant or his personal representative, whether or not the legal title is in defendant.—Fidelity-Phenix Fire Ins. Co. of New York v. Murphy, 146 So. 387, 226 Ala. 226.

(2) A claim by a chattel mortgagor against the mortgagee for damage to property, by use or waste, taken in detinue against the mortgagor and improperly delivered to the mortgagee by the sheriff, could be set off in the detinue action, being a demand not sounding in damages merely.—Torbert v. McFarland, 55 So. 311, 172 Ala. 117.

(3) Plea alleging plaintiff's fraudulent procurement of specific sum of money in settlement of loss under contract different from one sued on and seeking recovery thereof sets up demand sounding in damages merely, not available as set-off.—Fidelity-Phenix Fire Ins. Co. of New York v. Murphy, supra.

(4) While one who has been defrauded may bring an action for deceit and so shape his claim as to justify a recovery with interest, he cannot change the nature of his claim, so as to justify him in pleading set-off when he is being sued on some other cause of action.—Mutual Sav. Life Ins. Co. v. Osborne, 23 So. 2d 867, 247 Ala. 252.

(b) In Equity

A claim arising out of tort cannot ordinarily be the subject of set-off in equity; but an exception is sometimes made permitting set-off of a claim sounding in tort on equitable grounds, as where plaintiff is insolvent or nonresident.

In equity damages arising out of tort are not ordinarily the subject of set-off.[20] However, although there is authority to the contrary,[21] an exception has been made which permits interposition of a claim for set-off sounding in tort on equitable grounds,[22] as where plaintiff is insolvent[23] or nonresident;[24] and, where the court has equitable jurisdiction,[25] the exception applies whether plaintiff's action is brought in contract[26] or in tort.[27]

(c) Waiver of Tort

Where defendant, having a claim sounding in tort, waives the tort and sets up his claim as on an implied contract, the claim will be considered as arising out of contract for purposes of set-off.

Where defendant, having a claim against plaintiff sounding in tort, waives the tort and sets up his claim as on an implied contract, the claim is considered to be one arising on contract, within the meaning of the statutes, and may be set off;[28] and so, where a breach of the contract, which is the subject of the suit, results in a tort, damages for the breach may be set off, although it also constitutes a tort[29] The tort must, however, be waived in fact,[30] although it has been held that merely by claiming the set-off defendant may be considered as waiving the tort.[31] In cases of doubt the court will incline against construing the set-off to sound in tort.[32] Where the tort cannot be waived, a set-off sounding in tort will not be allowed.[33]

which arises out of the contract or transaction or is connected with the subject of the action may ordinarily be counterclaimed, whatever its nature,[35] whether contract or tort,[36] and irrespective of the nature and form of plaintiff's action,[37] whether in contract[38] or tort,[39] although it has been said that neither tort nor contract demands can be counterclaimed in a tort action.[40] It is only where the cause of action sought to be counterclaimed arises from an independent transaction that it becomes material whether or not the cause of action so sought to be counterclaimed is one on contract[41] In those jurisdictions which authorize any claim as a counterclaim, defendant may set up any counterclaim, whatever its nature,[42] whether contract or tort.[43]

(2) Claims Arising Out of Contract

(a) Contract against contract

(b) Contract against tort

(a) Contract against Contract

In an action on contract, a contract claim arising from the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based, or connected with the subject of the action, may be asserted as a counterclaim; and, under a statute to such effect, any cause of action arising out of contract, whether the one sued on or an independent one, may be asserted as a counterclaim in an action on contract.

Under the statutes providing for counterclaims of demands arising out of the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based, or connected with the subject of the action, discussed supra §§ 36, 40, where plaintiff's cause of action is founded on contract, a contract claim arising out of the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based, or connected with the subject of the action, may be counterclaimed[44]

Where the counterclaim statutes provide that in actions arising out of contracts defendants may counterclaim against plaintiff any demand also arising out of contract, the rule is well established that any cause of action arising out of a contract, either the one declared on by plaintiff, or some other contract disconnected therefrom, may be counterclaimed in an action ex contractu,[45] provided such claim is in existence at the time of the commencement of the action, discussed supra §§ 25–30. A liberal construction is accorded these provisions,[46] and the counterclaim is to be likewise liberally construed to be ex contractu.[47] The test for determining whether a particular demand arises on contract, within the meaning of these statutes, is whether the demand could have been redressed at common law by any of the forms of actions which might be resorted to in order to recover damages for breach of a contract,[48] and, where defendant's claim could be enforced by an action ex contractu, he may counterclaim it, even though he could also have recovered on the claim in an action ex delicto.[49] An implied contract may be the basis of a counterclaim.[50] The relief asked by plaintiff does not affect defendant's right to counterclaim where plaintiff's cause of action is founded on contract within the meaning of the statute,[51] but no counterclaim can be properly urged under such a statute where plaintiff's action is not based on contract.[52]

(b) Contract against Tort

Under some statutes a demand based on contract may be counterclaimed in an action on tort, provided it arises out of the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based or is connected with the subject of the action.

Where it arises out of the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based, as discussed supra § 36, or is connected with the subject of plaintiff's action, as discussed supra § 40, a demand based on contract may be counterclaimed against a claim founded on tort under some statutes [53] Where these essential requisites are absent, however, such a counterclaim is improper,[54] accordingly, counterclaims ex contractu have been disallowed in actions for conversion,[55] fraud,[56] negligence,[57] trespass,[58] wrongful arrest,[59] or for wrongful diversion of a stream.[60] Where plaintiff's action sounds in tort, no counterclaim can be allowed under a statute permitting the counterclaiming of any demand arising out of contract, in an action based on a contract;[61] nor can a contract be the basis of a counterclaim in a tort action under a statute allowing defendant, in an action sounding in tort, to counterclaim a similar cause of action.[62]

(b) Tort against tort

(a) Tort against Contract

Under some statutes a tort may be counterclaimed in an action ex contractu, provided it arises out of the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based, or is connected with the subject of the action.

Although it is frequently stated or held, without any express qualification, that a counterclaim in tort cannot be set up in an action ex contractu,[63] the true rule appears to be that a tort may be counterclaimed in an action ex contractu when it is within the statutory requirements that it arise out of the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based, or is connected with the subject of the action [64] Thus, where these requirements have been met, counterclaims for conspiracy,[65] conversion,[66] fraud or misrepresentation,[67] injury to

(1) The rules of civil procedure provide that a defendant in an action of assumpsit may set forth as counterclaim any cause of action or set-off which he has against plaintiff at the time of filing his answer which arises from the same transaction or occurrence from which plaintiff's cause of action arose, and it seems that a tort claim arising out of the transaction may be counterclaimed under this rule —Hedden v. Levi, Com Pl, 41 Luz Leg Reg 23—Jones v. Auto Rental Co, Com Pl, 96 Pittsb.Leg.J. 140.

(2) Prior to such rule, it was held that a tort could not be counterclaimed under the statute providing for counterclaims of demands enforceable in any action of assumpsit —Rothrock v Wolfe, 99 Pa Super 30—57 C J p 430 note 59.

reputation,[68] injury to property,[69] and negligence[70] have been held proper in actions ex contractu; but the counterclaim must be so connected with the matter in controversy that its consideration is necessary for a full determination of the rights of the parties,[71] and is improper if it does not arise out of the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based, or is not connected with the subject of the action.[72] Thus, because of their failure to comply with these essential requirements, counterclaims for assault,[73] conspiracy,[74] conversion,[75] ejectment,[76] forcible entry and detainer,[77] forcible exclusion and detainer,[78] fraud and misrepresentations,[79] injury to credit,[80] libel,[81] malicious prosecution,[82] misconduct in employment,[83] negligence,[84] slander,[85] trespass,[86] unlawful sale of goods,[87] waste,[88] wrongful attachment,[89] or wrongful filing of contract of sale after default[90] have been disallowed in actions ex contractu. The statutory provisions allowing defendant to counterclaim any claim on a contract in an action on a contract do not permit defendant to counterclaim a tort in an action ex contractu.[91]

(b) Tort against Tort

A tort claim may be asserted as a counterclaim in an action for tort, under some statutes, provided it arises out of the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based, or is connected with the subject of the action.

Although it has been stated, without qualification, that a tort cannot be counterclaimed against a tort,[92] where a tort claim complies with the general requirements of a counterclaim, namely, that it arise out of the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based, or be connected with the subject of the action, it may be counterclaimed in an action for tort[93] Accordingly, counterclaims for torts have been allowed in actions for assault,[94] conversion,[95] ejectment,[96] libel,[97] negligence,[98] slander,[99] or waste.[1] On the other hand, a tort not connected with the tort on which plaintiff sues cannot be counterclaimed;[2] and thus counterclaims

Demands in reconvention may be either in contract or in tort.

Subject to other applicable requirements, demands in reconvention may be either in contract[17] or in tort.[18] Compensation between mutual debtors takes place without distinction between different forms of debt.[19]

§ 42. Liquidated and Unliquidated Demands

a. Liquidated demands as basis of cross demands
b. Unliquidated demands as basis of cross demands

a. Liquidated Demands as Basis of Cross Demands

Liquidated demands are generally proper subjects of cross demands, whether in the form of recoupment, set-off, counterclaim, or compensation.

Liquidated damages are generally the subject of cross demands, whether in the form of recoupment,[20] set-off,[21] counterclaim,[22] or compensation.[23] Thus liquidated damages, as distinguished from a penalty, may be set off.[24] Liquidated damages cannot, however, be set off against an unliquidated claim where the statute provides that, if plaintiff's cause of action is a claim for unliquidated or uncertain damages founded on a tort or breach of covenant, defendant shall not be permitted to set off any debt due him by plaintiff.[25]

(1) Recoupment

Necessity of judgment
The doctrine of set-off is of equitable origin, and in an ordinary civil action instituted for the purpose where there are grounds for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction, the right of set-off is not limited to demands which have been reduced to judgment—Lee v Sioux Falls Motor Co, 274 N W. 614, 65 S.D. 401.

(2) Set-Off

(a) At law

(b) In equity

(a) At Law

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, unliquidated damages ordinarily cannot be pleaded as a set-off; but in a number of jurisdictions, the statutes are construed as allowing a set-off of unliquidated demands in a proper case.

Although in some jurisdictions statutes of set-off and counterclaim have been construed, in the absence of any limitations therein, to permit any cause of action arising from contract, whether for a liquidated demand or for unliquidated damages, to constitute a set-off, and be pleaded as such in any action founded on contract,[29] ordinarily, in the absence of statutory provision therefor, unliquidated damages cannot be pleaded as a set-off,[30] even though they are based on contract,[31] or even though plaintiff agreed to pay them when ascertained,[32] or although the demand which defendant seeks to interpose as a set-off becomes liquidated after the commencement of the action in which it is sought to be interposed.[33] Moreover, since a claim sounding in tort generally is not the subject of set-off, as discussed supra § 41 b (2) (a), it follows with greater force that a claim for unliquidated damages sounding in tort is unavailable as a set-off.[34] However, in keeping with the object and spirit of the remedy, which, as discussed supra § 11, is to litigate matters between the parties in one action, so far as is possible, some statutes are construed to allow a set-off, although the claim may be for an unliquidated amount.[35]

Arising on contract

Any cause of action arising from contract, whether for a liquidated demand or for unliquidated damages, may constitute a set-off and be pleaded as such in an action founded on contract.
U.S.—Tiger v. Sellers, C.C.A.Okl., 145 F.2d 920.
Okl.—Eyer v. Richards & Conover

Demands "not sounding in damages merely." In at least one jurisdiction, unliquidated demands may be set off if they do not "sound in damages merely,"[36] if they "sound in damages merely," they may not be set off.[37] Within the meaning of this rule, a debt or demand which may be set off as "not sounding in damages merely" is one which, when the facts on which it is based are established, the law is capable of measuring accurately by a pecuniary standard;[38] and, conversely, demands "sounding in damages merely" include those which, when the facts are established, the law is incapable of measuring by a pecuniary standard.[39] A claimant cannot make his demand one "not sounding in damages merely" by splitting off from an entire demand only such features of it as are measurable by definite standards.[40]

(b) In Equity

As a general rule, unliquidated damages cannot be set off in equity, at least in the absence of special equities, such as insolvency or nonresidence of plaintiff.

Since, as discussed supra § 5, in matters of set-off equity usually follows the law, and as unliquidated damages ordinarily cannot be set off at law, it is held as a broad general rule that unliquidated damages cannot be set off in equity,[41] unless some special equity intervenes;[42] and this rule applies with even greater force to unliquidated damages sounding in tort.[43] So unliquidated damages cannot

In Illinois

(1) Under express statutory provision, demands in the nature of set-off, whether in tort or contract and whether liquidated or unliquidated, may be pleaded as a cross demand in any action, such plea being called a counterclaim—State Bank of St Charles v Burr, 14 N E 2d 511, 295 Ill App 15—Heiple v. Lehman, 272 Ill App 513.

(2) Prior to such provision, the rule was that unliquidated demands could be set off, but only where they arose from the transaction sued on —Duncan Lumber Co. v Leonard Lumber Co, 163 N E 416, 332 Ill 104—57 C J. p 437 note 79 [c].

In Pennsylvania

(1) Some cases lay down the broad rule that unliquidated damages cannot be set off—Somerset Colliery Co. v. John, 68 A 843, 219 Pa. 380—Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission to Use of Albright v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co, Com.Pl., 51 Dauph. Co. 256, affirmed 23 A.2d 416, 343 Pa 543—Township of Lower Merion v. Miller's Estate, Com.Pl, 54 Montg. Co 52—Porter v. Levering, Com.Pl., 54 Montg Co. 1, 8 Som Leg J. 388—57 C J. p 438 note 79 [j] (2).

(2) Other cases take the stand that unliquidated damages arising from contract may be set off in an action on contract.—Shoup v Shoup, 15 Pa 361—57 C.J. p 438 note 79 [j] (5), (6).

(3) Many cases announce or follow the rule that a defendant may set off damages capable of liquidation by any known legal standard, but not damages which are not capable of such liquidation.—Appeal of Commonwealth Trust Co of Pittsburgh, 188 A. 200, 324 Pa. 161, 107 A.L R. 1453—E. Keeler Co v Sanitary Family Washing Co., 60 Pa Dist & Co 525, 58 Dauph Co. 410—57 C J. p 437 note 79 [j] (8)–(12).

(4) It is frequently held that the debt or damages which can be set off as an independent counterclaim must be such as the jury can find and liquidate in the ordinary way, just as if defendant were a plaintiff suing in debt, assumpsit, or covenant—Appeal of Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh, 188 A. 200, 324 Pa 161, 107 A L R 1453—Bank of Erie Now to Use of Kurczewski v. (5) The test is whether the right can be enforced in an action at law and is capable of liquidation by any known legal standard—Appeal of Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh, supra.

In Texas

(1) Unliquidated damages arising from tort or breach of a covenant cannot be set off against a liquidated and certain claim—Parker v. Moore Grocery Co, Civ App., 107 S W 2d 1083—57 C J. p 437 note 79 [m] (3)–(5).

(2) However, such damages may be set off if they arise from the same transaction as plaintiff's cause of action.—Parker v Moore Grocery Co, supra.

be pleaded as a set-off in an action in equity in aid of a fraud,[44] or where defendant has an adequate remedy at law against plaintiff[45] If, however, there is an agreement express or implied of stoppage pro tanto between the parties,[46] or a mutual credit,[47] or defendant confesses the amount to be due in his answer,[48] unliquidated demands may be set off in equity

Insolvency of plaintiff will move a court of equity to set off claims of defendant which would otherwise be disallowed, because unliquidated,[49] but not where the insolvency is denied and not supported by proof;[50] and it has been held that unliquidated damages sounding in tort cannot be set off in equity, even when insolvency intervenes[51]

Nonresidence of plaintiff. Although the right of set-off has been denied in such a case,[52] nonresidence of plaintiff is generally held to be such a circumstance as will move equity to set off unliquidated demands,[53] provided they arise out of the transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based,[54] but defendant cannot set up a claim for unliquidated damages against a nonresident, where the latter has a process agent within the state and sufficient property to discharge any claim defendant might recover against him.[55] The mere fact that one of several plaintiffs is a nonresident or insolvent will not move a court of equity to interpose an unliquidated set-off if other plaintiffs are residents and solvent.[56]

Deferment of decree. A court of equity will sometimes defer a decree to enable defendant to have the account liquidated, referring him to a cout of law to liquidate the claim.[57]

(3) Counterclaim

A claim for unliquidated damages generally may be pleaded as a counterclaim, provided it arises out of the same transaction as plaintiff's cause of action or is connected with the subject of the action.

It is generally held that a counterclaim which is otherwise available may be interposed, although for unliquidated damages,[58] but to bring in a counterclaim for an unliquidated debt, under a statute allowing counterclaims arising out of the contract or transaction sued on or connected with the subject of the action, discussed supra §§ 36, 40, the counterclaim must relate to the same transaction,[59] and a claim for unliquidated damages, disconnected with the cause of action sued on, cannot be counterclaimed.[60] Where defendant, an accommodation indorser of a note secured by a deed of trust, made payments on the note before the collateral security was exhausted, he cannot counterclaim the amount so paid, since, until definite determination of the worth of such security, whether he is entitled to recover any payments, and the amount, is uncertain.[61]

(4) Reconvention and Compensation

Reconventional demands need not be liquidated, provided they are connected with, and incidental to, the demand sued on. A debt offered in compensation must be liquidated to the same extent, and only to the same extent, that the demand sued on is liquidated

Reconventional demands connected with, and incident to, the demand sued on need not be liquidated,[62] but a demand in reconvention for unliquidated damages not arising out of the transaction sued on, or connected with, plaintiff's cause of action will not be allowed.[63] Although it is sometimes broadly stated that unliquidated damages cannot be set up in compensation,[64] the rule more accurately stated is that a debt offered in compensation must be equally liquidated with that of plaintiff,[65] and, under this latter rule, in an action on an unliquidated demand, unliquidated damages may be pleaded in compensation;[66] but in an action on a liquidated demand, defendant cannot plead in compensation an unliquidated claim.[67]

§ 43. —— What Constitutes

a. Liquidated demands
b. Unliquidated demands

a. Liquidated Demands

A claim is liquidated when the amount of it has been ascertained or is capable of ascertainment by mere calculation or computation in accordance with established or accepted legal standards or a rule or criterion agreed on by the parties.

The cases defining what is a liquidated demand within the meaning of statutes of set-off have been said to be confusing and unsatisfactory,[68] and, as will be seen hereinafter, vary according to the wording of the statute and the disposition of the various courts to extend or restrict the right of set-off. Whether damages are liquidated or unliquidated depends primarily on the terms of the contract itself.[69] Generally speaking, a claim is liquidated when the amount of it has been determined,[70] or, where the amount is capable of ascertainment, without trial[71] by jury,[72] by mere calculation or computation in accordance with known legal standards[73] or established market values,[74] or by rule or criterion fixed by the parties or by law,[75] and, if there is data given from which damages can be so ascertained, they are liquidated, within the meaning of the statutory requirement.[76] A claim is liquidated when the amount due has been fixed by law[77] or by a definite rule of law[78] or has been agreed on by the parties.[79] So, where plaintiff has acknowledged the amount due defendant, the claim, although formerly unliquidated, is so no longer,[80] and the same rule applies where the parties have fixed the value of the set-off,[81] but the rule is otherwise where the parties have agreed as to the amount only conditionally.[82]

Although, as discussed supra § 41 b (1), it has been said that the right to maintain indebitatus assumpsit for a claim is a test in favor of its allowance as a set-off, and not whether the demand is liquidated or unliquidated,[83] there is authority to the effect that defendant's claim is so liquidated as to entitle him to use it as a set-off when it would support an action of indebitatus assumpsit,[84] as for the value of property appropriated,[85] or for goods sold and delivered,[86] or money had and received.[87] Under the rule that any claim capable of exact ascertainment is a liquidated demand, it is held that there may be a set-off of claims arising on contract, the amount of which can be shown by the testimony of witnesses acquainted with the market.[88] A counterclaim for commissions for procuring a sale of property is liquidated, although the parties did not agree on the amount of commissions to be paid, the usual and customary charges for the performance of such services being read into the contract by operation of law.[89] Defendant's claim for brokers' commissions is not unliquidated where there is no controversy as to the price to be paid for the services performed, although there is a dispute as to whether defendants had performed any services.[90] Other claims which have been held sufficiently certain or liquidated within the meaning of statutes of set-off include claims for fees,[91] salary,[92] loss of profits,[93] the conversion of money,[94] a specific sum owing by plaintiff to defendant,[95] such as accrued alimony,[96] a definite sum of money paid under a contract,[97] as the price or value of goods received by plaintiff under a contract, performance of which he prevents,[98] an agreed price for work and labor,[99] money advanced,[1] money which defendant bank was led to pay its customer because of the negligence of plaintiff, a clerk in the bank, in having overstated the balance to a customer's credit,[2] the alleged difference between the price plaintiff as agent for defendant in the sale of notes received therefor and the price he represented himself to have received,[3] the sum paid by an original contractor to repair a wall which collapsed through the act of a subcontractor,[4] and the contract price of a specified quantity of defective goods sold to defendant by plaintiff.[5] In an action for the purchase price of food guaranteed to conform to the pure food law, a fine paid by defendant by reason of the impurity of the food is in the nature of liquidated damages for breach of contract,[6] and not, as between the parties to the suit, a penalty.[7]

Account annexed. A claim on an account annexed to the pleading is one for liquidated damages, notwithstanding allegations showing that defendant's right to recover thereon arose out of a breach of contract.[8]

b. Unliquidated Demands

An unliquidated demand is one, the amount of which is unascertained and incapable of ascertainment by mere computation or calculation in accordance with agreed on criteria or established or accepted legal standards.

Generally speaking, a demand is not liquidated unless it appears how much is due;[9] unliquidated damages are unascertained damages. They are such as rest in opinion only,[10] which cannot be ascertained by computation or calculation,[11] but require ascertainment by a jury,[12] whose verdict is regulated by the peculiar circumstances of each particular case.[13] Claims which would have to be determined from the conflicting opinions of witnesses are neither liquidated[14] nor capable of being ascertained by calculation;[15] and so, where data for calculating the amount of a claim depend on values to be established by witnesses, the claim is not liquidated.[16]

Thus damages are so unliquidated as not to be the subject of set-off, when there is no criterion provided by the parties or by the law for their ascertainment,[17] or when they have not been adjusted, or settled, or agreed on by the parties,[18] and, if there is a genuine controversy as to which of two sums is due, the demand is unliquidated.[19] Where the trial of the issues under defendant's set-off would involve the question as to whether or not there were any damages and, if so, how much, and would necessarily require proof as to market value, it cannot be said that the amount of damages is fixed and certain;[20] and a claim for damages for failure to deliver goods in pursuance of an executory contract of sale is a claim for unliquidated damages,[21] notwithstanding the Uniform Sales Act states the measure.[22] Damages for breach of covenant[23] or breach of warranty[24] are regarded as unliquidated; and the same has been held as to damages for breach of a contract not to carry on a particular business in a certain place,[25] a claim to an inchoate or contingent right of dower,[26] charges for changes and repairs, made by the purchaser of machinery and billed to the seller,[27] damages for defects in goods sold and delivered,[28] damages for the flowing of land,[29] a claim for the market value of work and labor,[30] a claim on an unsettled partnership account,[31] and a claim for breach of a contract to renew or procure insurance.[32] A claim recoverable only by action of account or bill in equity is so unliquidated as not to be the subject of set-off.[33]

Although it has been held that, where defendant counterclaims for plaintiff's breach of an agreement to pay his expenses and the reasonable value of his time in the performance of services, the value of the time and amount of expenses being alleged, the items so claimed are not unliquidated,[34] there is authority to the effect that damages from breach of contract are not rendered certain and capable of calculation by allegations in the declaration of set-off in respect of the prices which defendant had to pay to supply himself with the goods contracted for,[35] or by the statement of the exact amount of damages claimed,[36] and the verification of an open account sued on does not affect the nature of the demand so as to make it a certain demand within a statute providing that, if plaintiff's suit is founded on a certain demand, defendant shall not be permitted to set off unliquidated or uncertain damages founded on a tort or breach of covenant on the part of plaintiff.[37]

§ 44. Legal and Equitable Claims or Demands

In the absence of statutes authorizing it, an equitable demand ordinarily may not be set off in an action at law; but under code provisions, statutes, or rules of court to such effect, equitable demands may be asserted by way of set-off and counterclaim.

In the absence of statutes authorizing it, an equitable claim ordinarily may not be set off, counterclaimed, or recouped in an action at law[38] Such relief has been granted, however, in an action brought by the administrator of an insolvent estate;[39] and in an action at law against the equitable owner of a judgment obtained by a third party against plaintiff, it was held that the judgment was a proper set-off.[40] In the federal courts an equitable defense has been held not available as a set-off in an action at law[41]

Under code provision, statute, or rule of court Under a court rule to such effect, an equitable claim which arises out of the transaction which is the subject matter of the suit may be set up as a counterclaim thereto;[42] and under some statutes or rules of court, an equitable demand may be set off against a claim for money demands on contract,[43] or counterclaimed regardless of whether it arises from the same transaction as plaintiff's demand and irrespective of the nature of plaintiff's demand.[44] Under a statute permitting defendant, in an action on a debt, to plead any counterclaim which he may have, subject to such limitations as may be prescribed by law, in the absence of provisions limiting the right, defendant may, in an action at law, set off an equitable demand[45] It has been held that a claim at law may be set off against a claim sounding in equity,[46] and, under a provision to such effect, legal as well as equitable counterclaims may be interposed in an equitable action.[47] On the other hand, under a statute providing that a counterclaim shall be one on which suit might be maintained by defendant against plaintiff, a valid counterclaim in an equity suit must contain matters of equitable, and not legal cognizance.[48] Statutes authorizing set-offs have been held to recognize no greater range of equitable claims than that permitted by established chancery practice.[49]

Where the code provides that counterclaims may be such as were formerly denominated legal or equitable, a corporate defendant may, in an action on a promissory note, counterclaim for secret profits made in the transaction by its director through the medium of plaintiff as trustee;[50] and, where plaintiff sues to recover possession of land, defendant may set up his claim thereto as cestui que trust and compel plaintiff to convey legal title to him[51] In an action at law by the vendee in a contract for the purchase of real estate to recover the purchase money paid under the contract, defendants may interpose an equitable counterclaim for specific performance,[52] and so, where plaintiff brings an action to recover rent, defendant may set up as a counterclaim an extinguishment of the right to recover rent under an option in the lease, and also demand a specific performance of an agreement therein to convey.[53]

In an action in the nature of ejectment for nonpayment of rent, defendant may set up an equitable counterclaim for damages resulting from his partial eviction from the demised premises.[54] Where a vendor of land brings an action for possession against his vendee, who has been let into possession, the title being reserved, the latter may, by counterclaim in the same action, set up the contract of sale and ask for an account of the payments on the purchase money[55] In an action to recover the contract price of goods sold, defendant may counterclaim for an accounting of trust funds held by plaintiff, such relief necessarily or properly being involved in the action;[56] and in an action on promissory notes, given for the price of an interest in a chattel, defendant may set up an equitable counterclaim for an accounting of moneys subsequently received by plaintiff from the use or unlawful sale of the property.[57] The amount due on a bond for the conveyance of land may be counterclaimed in an action on a promissory note against the maker of the bond, where plaintiff was in possession of the land and defendant offered to make the conveyance provided for.[58]

§ 45. Secured Claims

A secured claim may ordinarily be set off or asserted as a counterclaim without first surrendering or exhausting the security; and an unsecured claim may be set off against a secured claim.

Since, as discussed in Pledges § 55 d (2), a pledgee is as a general rule under no obligation to surrender or enforce collaterals held by him before suing on the principal obligation, a secured claim may be set off without first surrendering the security,[59] or exhausting it;[60] nor is defendant compelled to realize on the security before setting up the demand as a counterclaim,[61] in the absence of an agreement to the contrary.[62] Conversely, a claim unsecured may be set off against a secured claim[63]

§ 46. Penalties

Whether or not a penalty may be set off or counterclaimed depends both on the statute involved and the nature of the penalty.

On the ground that a claim for a statutory penalty is for a sum certain rather than for a tort act, it has been held defendant may set off such a claim under a statute permitting a set-off in a suit for any debt and allowing a debt itself to lie for this set-off[64] or providing that mutual debts and liquidated or unliquidated demands not sounding in damages merely may be set off.[65] So, a party was authorized, in an action on a promissory note, to set off double damages provided by statute for injuries to property by disloyal parties during the Civil War[66] On the other hand, where recovery only by direct action is expressly provided by statute, penalties may not be recovered by way of counterclaim or other defensive pleading.[67] A statute authorizing a town to recover in an action of debt a penalty from a collector of taxes for failure to file his accounts, however, being exclusive of other remedies, the amount of the penalty cannot be set off in an action by the collector to recover his agreed compensation for collecting the taxes;[68] and under a statute requiring a counterclaim to be based on a contract existing at the time of the commencement of the action, a counterclaim based on defendant's right as creditor of a manufacturing corporation to recover a statutory penalty of plaintiff, trustee thereof, for the latter's failure to file the yearly report of the company will not lie.[69]

Under federal equity rule authorizing a counterclaim arising out of the transaction which is the subject matter of the suit or which may be the subject matter of an independent suit in equity, defendant, sued on secured promissory notes, could not counterclaim for the statutory penalty for failure of plaintiff, as assignee of such notes, to enter the assignment on the margin of the record of the lien.[70]

§ 47. Taxes

A claim for taxes generally is not a proper subject of set-off, recoupment, or reconventional demand.

A claim for taxes is not such a debt, demand, contract, or judgment as is allowed to be set off under the statutes of set-off, which are construed uniformly, in the light of public policy, to exclude the remedy in an action on any indebtedness of the state or municipality to one who is liable to the state or municipality for taxes.[71] Neither are they a proper subject of recoupment, since they do not arise out of the contract or transaction sued on.[72] A constitutional provision that taxes shall be collected without suit precludes a reconventional demand made for taxes, praying for a personal judgment against the tax debtor.[73]

§ 48. Parties to, and Mutuality of, Cross Demands

a. In general
b. In equity
c. Demands in favor of or against third persons

a. In General

(1) In general
(2) Set-off
(3) Counterclaim

(1) In General

As a general rule, in order that the defendant may set up a demand in recoupment, compensation, or reconvention to the plaintiff's demand, the demands must be mutual and subsisting between the same parties and must be due in the same capacity or right.

As a general rule, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise and subject to certain exceptions, in order that defendant may set up a demand in recoupment to plaintiff's demand the demands must be mutual and subsisting between the same parties,[74] and must be due in the same capacity or right.[75] This rule applies when defendant sets up his demand in compensation of plaintiff's demand[76] or when defendant sets up his demand in reconvention.[77] In accordance with statutory provisions, compensation cannot take place to the prejudice of the rights of a third person.[78]

(2) Set-Off

As a general rule, in order to warrant a set-off the demands must be mutual and subsisting between the same parties, and furthermore must be due in the same capacity or right, and there must be mutuality as to the quality of the right.

It is a broad general rule of practically universal application that, in the absence of statutes otherwise providing and subject to certain exceptions, in order to warrant a set-off the demands must be mutual and subsisting between the same parties,[79] and of the right.[81] In order to be mutual the cross demands set up ordinarily must be shown to belong individually to defendant,[82] with a corresponding right to sue for them in his individual name,[83] and defendant, as a general rule, cannot set off a demand on which he is not entitled to sue in his own name,[84] but the names in which suit may be brought is not the only criterion of the right of set-off and mutuality of right in a set-off is not necessarily circumscribed by the right to bring an action.[85]

It has been held that the rule of mutuality relates to identity of interest at the time the right of set-off arises and not to identity of origin,[86] and that the right of set-off is not limited to mutual dealings[87] and need not necessarily arise between the same parties.[88] An exception to the rule requiring mutuality of demands in order to warrant a set-off may arise out of the agreement of the parties.[89] Under some statutory provisions either party can plead and prove a set-off in defense of a claim by the other party,[90] and the set-off need not exist between all the parties plaintiff and defendant,[91] but under a statute which provides that defendant may set forth a set-off in his answer the remedy of set-off is limited to a defendant in an action.[92]

Litigation between husband and wife. It has been held that in a suit by a wife against her husband he cannot plead as a set-off a promissory note given to his wife for moneys belonging to her before marriage, but remaining her separate property after-

Independent action

Test of mutuality of demand in order to determine whether a defendant is entitled to a set-off is whether defendant could recover against plaintiff in an independent action, so that when legislature creates an action that does not admit of such mutuality of adjustment set-off does not apply —O'Dowd v U S. ward,[93] and in an action on a note by a wife against her husband he has been held not entitled to plead as set-off gratuitous improvements made by him upon their farm owned by them as tenants in common.[94] On the other hand, in a husband's action against his wife for contribution for expenditures made by the husband on property owned by them, before their separation, as tenants in common, the wife has been held entitled to credit for expenditures made by her unless the evidence shows they were intended to be made without claim for credit.[95]

(3) Counterclaim

The rule that cross demands must be mutual and subsisting between the same parties, in the same capacity or right, and that there must be mutuality as to the quality of the right generally applies when the defendant sets up his demand as a counterclaim to the plaintiff's demand.

The rule that cross demands must be mutual and subsisting between the same parties, in the same capacity or right, and that there must be mutuality as to the quality of the right generally applies when defendant sets up his demand as a counterclaim to plaintiff's demand.[96] Accordingly, defendant cannot set up as a counterclaim allegations of such a character that, if they were in the form of a complaint in a separate action, another person, not a party to the pending suit, would be a necessary defendant to such separate action.[97] One who is not entitled to sue on a contract cannot maintain a counterclaim based on such contract.[98] The rule as to the necessity of mutuality of cross demands does not apply where the counterclaim interposed is really in the nature of a cross suit within the meaning of a statute permitting such a suit.[99]

Under some statutory provisions it has been held unnecessary that a counterclaim exist as between all parties plaintiff and defendant,[1] and, in a proper case, one defendant in an action can counterclaim against another defendant therein;[2] but under other statutory provisions a counterclaim which involves a controversy between defendants only is not authorized,[3] and a counterclaim must raise issues affecting plaintiff.[4] Under some statutes one brought into a lawsuit on the theory of securing a complete determination of the issues has been held entitled to proceed by counterclaim against the original plaintiff,[5] or against the original defendant,[6] or against both,[7] provided the nature of his claim so warrants,[8] but under other statutes, where an additional defendant is brought into a suit by the original defendant therein, it has been held that such additional defendant cannot file a counterclaim against the original defendant.[9]

b. In Equity

Where there are cross demands between two parties of such a nature that if both were recoverable at law they would be the subject of legal set-off, then if either of the demands is a matter of equitable jurisdiction the set-off ordinarily will be enforced in equity.

In accordance with the rule that courts of equity usually follow the law in matters of set-off, in the absence of any intervening equity, where there are cross demands between two parties of such a nature that if both were recoverable at law they would be the subject of legal set-off, then if either of the demands is a matter of equitable jurisdiction the set-off ordinarily will be enforced in equity.[10] However, a right to an equitable set-off[11] or counterclaim[12] will be disallowed where to permit it would impair or destroy the rights or equities of a third person

As a general rule in equity, as at law, the right of set-off is reciprocal, and only mutual claims and such as are in the same right or capacity can be set off,[13] but this doctrine of mutuality is not permitted to work an injustice, for whenever it is necessary to effect a clear equity or to prevent an irremediable injustice the set-off will be allowed, in equity, even though the debts are not mutual, and the set-off, therefore, one which a court of law would not be authorized to make,[14] unless the rights of third persons will thereby be adversely affected[15] or unless one of the claims is owned in whole or in part by a third person[16]

In such jurisdictions as permit or require the administration of law and equity by the same court, it has been held that the equitable exception to the strict rule of mutuality may be applied even when plaintiff's action was really an action at law[17]

Thus equity may, in a proper case, set off a debt without regard to strict mutuality or whether the debts are due in the same right on a showing of insolvency[18] or in cases of nonresidence.[19]

c. Demands in Favor of or against Third Persons

As a general rule a debt against a third person not a party to the record, or a demand against the plaintiff in favor of a third person not a party to the action cannot be pleaded in recoupment, compensation, or reconvention, or as a counterclaim, cross action, or set-off.

As a general rule a debt against a third person not a party to the record cannot be pleaded in recoupment,[20] compensation,[21] or as a set-off.[22] A debt or demand against a third person not a party to the record ordinarily cannot be pleaded in reconvention[23] or as a counterclaim,[24] but the mere mention of the connection which a third person not a party to the action had with plaintiff in the transaction on which the counterclaim is based does not render the counterclaim defective.[25] Under some statutes defendant may, in a proper case, seek relief by counterclaim against other persons as well as against the original plaintiff,[26] regardless

In accordance with the rule of mutuality, it is very generally held that a demand against plaintiff in favor of a third person not a party to the action cannot be recouped,[30] set off,[31] counterclaimed,[32] reconvened,[33] or compensated,[34] in the absence of the execution of an assignment[35] Payments made to plaintiff by defendant's agent may be pleaded in reconvention.[36]

§ 49. —— Debts and Demands of Nominal Parties and Real Parties in Interest

While it has been held that the apparent legal holder of a claim may plead it in set-off, although the real interest be in another, the rule requiring mutuality of debts or demands has been held to refer not merely to the nominal plaintiff and defendant but to the real parties in interest

While it has been held that the apparent legal holder of a claim may plead it in set-off, although the real interest be in another,[37] the rule requiring mutuality of debts or demands has been held to refer not merely to the nominal plaintiff and defendant but to the real parties in interest,[38] and it has further been held that the court will go outside of the record to find the real party.[39] Thus it has been held that a set-off will not be allowed against plaintiff if he is a mere nominal party suing for another beneficially interested,[40] and, on the other hand, it has been held that a claim against the person having the real beneficial interest in the cause sued on, although not a party to the record, may be set off[41] or counterclaimed,[42] and that, in cases where a judgment ought not to be obtained against plaintiff for the excess over the debt sued on, as much of the set-off may be allowed as will extinguish the claim.[43]

In a suit by a trustee defendant may set off or counterclaim a debt due him from the cestui que trust,[44] and, conversely, in an action against a cestui que trust he may set off a claim, the legal title to which is in the trustee,[45] and a third person for whose benefit a simple contract has been entered into for a valuable consideration may plead it by way of set-off.[46] Notwithstanding a set-off may be asserted against the actual party in interest, it has been held necessary to show against that person a cause of action for which defendant could sue him in his own name,[47] and that such third person is the real party in interest.[48] Under a statute defining the parties between whom a counterclaim may be enforced, the words "defendant" and "plaintiff" have been held to include cestuis que trusts[49] and their trustees.[50]

§ 50. —— Debts and Demands in Representative and Individual Capacities

a. In general
b. Executors and administrators
c. Trustees
d. Public officers

a. In General

Ordinarily a claim against the plaintiff in a representative capacity cannot be set off in a suit brought in his individual capacity, and vice versa, and an individual demand against a plaintiff suing in a representative capacity cannot be counterclaimed.

In accordance with the general rules requiring mutuality of the debts or demands, ordinarily a claim against plaintiff in a representative capacity cannot be set off in a suit brought in his individual capacity,[51] and vice versa,[52] and an individual demand against plaintiff suing in a representative capacity cannot be counterclaimed[53] Similarly, when the cause of action sued on is defendant's failure to fulfill an official or fiduciary obligation, he cannot set off a debt due from plaintiff to him in his individual capacity,[54] and a claim due defendant in a representative capacity cannot be counterclaimed against an individual demand[55]

b. Executors and Administrators

In the absence of a statute or court rule providing otherwise, ordinarily in a suit by or against an executor or administrator claims owed by or owing to him in his individual capacity may not be asserted as a set-off or counterclaim.

In the absence of a statute or court rule providing otherwise,[56] ordinarily in an action by an executor as such a claim against him in his individual capacity cannot be pleaded as a set-off[57] or as a counterclaim,[58] and the same rule applies to an action by an administrator,[59] although when he

sues in his individual capacity it may be set off.[60] In an action by an administrator, defendant cannot set off a demand against him in another capacity,[61] and it has been held that even though an executor sues in his own name if he is in fact claiming a debt due the estate a set-off against him personally will not be allowed,[62] but where defendant proves that plaintiff individually owns the demand a set-off may be had against plaintiff individually, although the action was brought by plaintiff nominally as executor.[63]

In an action by an individual, a claim against him as executor[64] or administrator[65] cannot be pleaded as a set-off. In an action against an executor[66] or an administrator[67] a demand due defendant in his individual capacity cannot be set off even though the administrator has acquired the interest of the heirs of decedent in the estate,[68] and in an action against defendant in his own right he cannot set off a debt due him as administrator[69] or as executor.[70] However, an executor or administrator sued in his individual capacity can set off a debt due him individually,[71] or due to himself and another individually, provided the other consents, but not otherwise,[72] and where an administrator has filed his final account and charged himself with a debt such debt becomes his own, and in an action thereon he may set off individual claims against plaintiff.[73] Where the executor or administrator is sole heir or legatee, he may, on proof that all debts of deceased have been paid, counterclaim a demand in favor of the estate in an action against him individually,[74] and in the same circumstances an individual debt may be counterclaimed against him in a suit brought by him in his official capacity.[75]

In equity. In the absence of any special equities, a debt due from plaintiff, to defendant as administrator, is not available as a set-off against an individual debt in equity,[76] and the individual debt of an administrator is not available as a set-off to a demand due him in his representative capacity.[77] However, in a suit by an insolvent plaintiff against an administrator in his representative capacity, a debt due the administrator in his individual capacity may be set off,[78] and also, if plaintiff is insolvent, a debt due defendant as administrator may be set off against an individual debt;[79] and the same rule applies where plaintiff is a married woman against whom a personal judgment cannot be rendered.[80]

c. Trustees

As a general rule claims owed by or owing to a trustee in his individual capacity cannot be set off against a claim owed to or by him in his capacity as trustee.

As a general rule a claim which defendant has against plaintiff in his individual capacity cannot be set off against a claim due plaintiff as trustee,[81] and such demand cannot be counterclaimed;[82] and in a suit by plaintiff in his individual capacity defendant cannot set off a claim against him as trustee.[83] In a suit against one in an individual capacity he cannot set off a debt due to him as trustee,[84] and in a suit against a trustee he cannot set off a claim due to him in his individual capacity,[85] but where the demand against defendant and the demand in favor of him are in his capacity as trustee he may set off the one against the other [86]

A trustee cannot, as a rule, set off against the trust fund or property his individual demand against the creator of the trust[87] or an indebtedness due him individually by the beneficiary,[88] and a debt due a trustee from a beneficiary cannot be set off against a debt owed the beneficiary by the trustee where the demands arise out of different trust estates.[89] The equitable rule allowing a set-off in case of insolvency does not apply where the one asserting a set-off is a trustee and the set-off is a trust fund.[90]

Trustee in bankruptcy cannot set off a claim due him against a joint indebtedness of himself and his cotrustees.[91]

d. Public Officers

Ordinarily, in an action to recover money received by an officer in his official capacity, a debt due from the plaintiff to the officer in his private capacity is not a proper subject of a set-off.

Ordinarily, in an action to recover money received by an officer in his official capacity, a debt due from plaintiff to the officer in his private capacity is not a proper subject of a set-off [92] Thus a public officer when sued for money which he has failed to pay over as required by statute cannot set off a debt due himself from the municipality for salary[93] or for fees.[94] A claim against an officer for neglect of duty cannot be set off against a debt due him as an individual,[95] and in an action against a public officer on a claim for which he is personally liable he cannot set off a claim due the municipality in which he officiates.[96]

A debt due to an officer from a city[97] or county[98] cannot be set off against a debt due from the officer to the state. Also, the private demands of a public officer cannot be set off against a claim by him in his official capacity[99] or recouped [1] In an action against an officer in his individual capacity, he may set off demands due him in that capacity.[2] A municipal corporation may properly set off, in an action by an officer for his salary, a claim against the officer for moneys of the corporation unlawfully received by him [3]

In a suit on an official bond, it has been held that defendant may set off against a shortage in certain public funds in his hands the amount due him for his services and overpayments made by him for the

f. Joint and several debts or demands against separate debts or demands, and vice versa
g. Discontinuance or want of service as to some of defendants
h. Equitable set-off of joint and separate demands and liabilities

a. Joint Demands against Separate Demands

Subject to certain exceptions, as a general rule a joint demand cannot be set off or counterclaimed against an individual demand.

As a general rule a joint demand cannot be set off[6] or counterclaimed[7] against an individual demand. However, exceptions to the rule, depending on the peculiar circumstances of the particular case, have been recognized,[8] and it has been held that, where plaintiff sues several defendants for breach of a joint contract and some of them denying a joint liability aver a several liability as to themselves, these may set up a counterclaim, and if their averment of several liability is sustained the counterclaim will be allowed[9]

b. Separate Demands against Joint Demands

Ordinarily, unless otherwise provided by statute, separate demands cannot be set off or counterclaimed against joint demands in the absence of insolvency or some other ground for equitable relief.

Ordinarily separate demands may not be set off or counterclaimed against joint demands[10] in the absence of insolvency[11] or some other ground for equitable relief,[12] but this is permissible under statutes which so provide.[13]

c. Joint Demands against Joint Demands

In an action to enforce a joint demand, a joint demand in favor of the defendants usually may be pleaded as a counterclaim or as a set-off.

In an action to enforce a joint demand, a joint demand against plaintiffs in favor of defendants usually may be pleaded as a counterclaim[14] or as a set-off,[15] and it has been held that this is so although the action is brought against only one of the parties liable,[16] but this last proposition has also been denied.[17] It has been held that one of the defendants sued on a joint demand for damages may individually set off a joint demand in favor of all the defendants and recover damages for any amount over and above the damages sustained by plaintiffs,[18] irrespective of whether one or more of the defendants defaulted[19]

d. Joint Debts against Separate Debts

As a general rule a joint debt cannot be set off against a separate debt, or counterclaimed, in the absence of an agreement authorizing it.

As a general rule a joint debt cannot be set off against a separate debt,[20] nor can a joint debt, as a general rule, be counterclaimed,[21] in the absence of an agreement authorizing it.[22] Thus it has been held that a joint debt owed by plaintiff and another or others cannot be set off[23] or counterclaimed[24] against a debt due plaintiff individually. It has been held, however, that a debt due by plaintiff on a note jointly executed by him and another who has since died may be set off against the claim which is the subject of the suit.[25]

Debt due to defendant and another against debt owing by him alone. Defendant, in a suit against him for a debt owing by him alone, has been held not entitled to set off[26] or counterclaim[27] a debt due to him and another, inasmuch as the demands are not mutual.

e. Separate Debts against Joint Debts

As a general rule a separate debt cannot be set off against a joint debt, and the rule applies with respect to a debt due from a sole plaintiff to one of several joint defendants, and to a debt due from one of plaintiffs against a joint debt due all plaintiffs

As a general rule, a separate debt cannot be set off against a joint debt[28] Thus it has been held that a separate debt cannot be set off or counterclaimed[29] or pleaded in reconvention[30] unless there is an agreement permitting it[31] or unless there are circumstances calling for an application of the rules of equitable set-off.[32] It has been held, however, that set-off and recoupment are governed by different principles and that a demand due one defendant may be recouped against a joint demand;[33] and it has also been held that in an action on a joint contract the individual debt of one joint contractor may be pleaded in compensation of his share in the joint contract.[34]

Individual debts of plaintiff to one or more defendants. Ordinarily a debt due from a sole plaintiff to one of several joint defendants cannot be set off[35] or counterclaimed,[36] and in like manner the separate debts of a sole plaintiff to each of several joint defendants less than all,[37] or separate debts due from him to each of the joint defendants,[38] or a debt due from plaintiff to one of the defendants and a third person not a party to the suit,[39] ordinarily cannot be set off or counterclaimed. Nevertheless, if a claim offered as a set-off belongs to all the defendants jointly at the commencement of the suit, it has been held to be no objection that one of the defendants has derived his title by assignment from a codefendant.[40] So it has been held that, where one of two joint debtors dies and the obligation survives against the other, the debt may be set off against the survivor in an action by him on a debt due him individually.[41]

In some jurisdictions, sometimes by virtue of statute, it has been held that a debt due from plaintiff to one only of the joint defendants may be set off[42]

or counterclaimed[43] against a joint debt; and it has also been held that separate debts due from plaintiff to each of several joint defendants less than all are a proper subject of set-off.[44]

Individual debts due by one or more plaintiffs against joint debts due all plaintiffs Generally a debt due from one of plaintiffs cannot be set off[45] or counterclaimed[46] against a joint debt due all of plaintiffs, and separate debts due from several plaintiffs,[47] or from all plaintiffs individually,[48] cannot be set off against a debt due all of plaintiffs jointly. In a suit by several plaintiffs for a joint demand, a debt due from one of the plaintiffs and another person, not a party to the suit, jointly, cannot be set off,[49] but it has been held that, where defendant shows that one of several plaintiffs is the sole party in interest, he may avail himself of a set-off against that plaintiff if he might have done so had the action been brought by such plaintiff alone[50]

f. Joint and Several Debts or Demands against Separate Debts or Demands, and Vice Versa

As a general rule, where action is brought against two or more defendants on a joint and several demand, or on a several demand, a set-off or counterclaim consisting of a demand in favor of one of them against the plaintiff may, if otherwise without objection, be interposed.

Although, under some statutory provisions, a claim due from plaintiff to one of defendants alone cannot be set off in an action on a joint and several demand brought against two defendants jointly,[51] as a general rule, where action is brought against two or more defendants on a joint and several demand,[52] or on a several demand,[53] a set-off or counterclaim consisting of a demand in favor of one of them against plaintiff may, if otherwise without objection, be interposed; and it is immaterial in such case that the action is joint in form,[54] or that, by agreement of the parties, actions on several demands are tried together, where the parties in one suit do not become parties in the other suit and their rights and obligations remain unchanged[55]

In an action on a joint and several demand against one obligor, a payment made by the coöbligor on account of or in part payment of the obligation may be pleaded as a set-off,[56] but he cannot plead a joint demand as a counterclaim for damages for unskillful work done by plaintiff for defendant, his coobligor on the note sued on, and a stranger to the note and suit.[57] A demand which is joint and several may be set off or counterclaimed against a separate demand.[58] In an action by several plaintiffs on a contract which itself divides the fund claimed and makes a specific share due to each, a cause of action existing in favor of defendants against one of plaintiffs, although it could not be set up to bar the right to an accounting, is a proper counterclaim against the share of the plaintiff whom it affects,[59] but it has been held that joint demands in favor of two out of a number of defendants against plaintiff cannot be set up by way of counterclaim unless the action is such that a joint judgment can be rendered against such two defendants separately from the others.[60]

g. Discontinuance or Want of Service as to Some of Defendants

Ordinarily, if a discontinuance be entered as to one or more of several defendants, the others may plead in set-off a debt due from the plaintiff to all the original defendants

Ordinarily, if a discontinuance be entered as to one or more of several defendants, the others may plead in set-off a debt due from plaintiff to all the original defendants,[61] and where, in an action against several defendants, plaintiff discontinues as to some of them the remainder may set off a claim existing in their favor against plaintiff, although they could not have done so while the action stood against all the defendants.[62] According to some decisions, where process is against two on a joint liability, but only one is served, the one served is entitled to any set-off which would be available for the two;[63] but other decisions hold to the contrary, the view being taken that the demands are not mutual.[64] It has been held that where an action is commenced against two defendants but in consequence of a return of non est inventus as to one defendant the action is entered and prosecuted only against the other defendant, such defendant may set off a demand due to himself alone.[65]

h. Equitable Set-Off of Joint and Separate Demands and Liabilities

The general rule in equity is that joint and separate debts cannot be set off against each other, but wherever it is necessary to effect a clear equity, or to prevent irremediable injustice, a set-off of joint and separate debts will be allowed.

The general rule in equity, as at law, is that joint and separate debts cannot be set off against each other[66] Thus, in the absence of some special equitable circumstance, a set-off, in equity, of joint or separate debts or demands will not be allowed,[67] and it will not be allowed where the allowance would work injustice.[68] Debts nominally due between the same persons cannot be set off in equity, if, by assignment or otherwise, the real interest is different.[69]

On the other hand, wherever it is necessary to effect a clear equity, or to prevent irremediable injustice, a set-off of joint and separate debts will be allowed,[70] as where justice will not be obtained unless the court will disentangle the reciprocal liabilities of the parties.[71] Thus, where plaintiff is a nonresident, it has been held that a claim of one of several joint defendants can be set off against the joint debt.[72] Also, in cases of joint credit given because of individual indebtedness, or where the joint debt is a mere security for the separate debt of the principal, it has been held that the equity is obvious and that a set-off will be allowed.[73]

Insolvency. While it has been held that individual claims may be set off, in equity, against a joint liability even though the party asserting the joint liability is solvent,[74] in determining whether joint and separate debts may, in equity, be set off against

a. In actions by individual partner or partners
b. In actions against individual partner
c. In actions by firm
d. In actions against firm
e. In actions against firm and individual partners
f. Equitable set-off of partnership and individual debts and demands
g. Survivorship, and representation of deceased partner

a. In Actions by Individual Partner or Partners

As a general rule, in a suit by a partner individually, a firm debt due defendant cannot be pleaded as a set-off, counterclaim, or in compensation or recoupment, unless all the partners consent, but by reason of statute, or under the terms of an agreement of the parties, or where plaintiff has assumed the debts of the firm, a firm debt due defendant may be allowed as a set-off in a suit by a partner.

As a general rule, in a suit by a partner individually, a firm debt due defendant cannot be pleaded as a set-off,[79] counterclaim,[80] or in compensation[81] or recoupment,[82] unless all the partners consent.[83] This has been held to be true notwithstanding plaintiff is insolvent where it is not claimed that the other partners are also insolvent,[84] or although defendant thought the firm contained but one person.[85]

On the other hand, a firm debt due defendant may be allowed as a set-off in a suit by a partner by reason of the terms of an agreement of the parties,[86] or where plaintiff has assumed the debts of the firm,[87] in which case the demand against the firm may also be counterclaimed.[88] Further, in an action by an individual, a demand against the firm of which plaintiff is a member may be set off, where it is alleged that the causes of action sued on are those of the firm and not of plaintiff alone,[89] and, in a suit by one of two partners, in whose name the particular business respecting which the suit is brought is uniformly done, a demand against the partnership may also be allowed as a set-off[90]

Under a statute making partnership debts joint and several, it has been held that, in a suit by a partner on an individual claim, a debt of the firm of which plaintiff is a member may be set off,[91] and this has also been held to be true under a statute expressly authorizing actions on partnership obligations against one partner alone,[92] as well as under

Reason for rule

At common law, and in all states where the matter is not controlled by statute, the liability of partners is joint and not several, so that a partnership debt cannot be used as set-off against the claim of a partner individually.—Stewart v. Terwilliger, 143 N W. 17, 177 Mich. 313, Ann Cas 1915C 808.

In Alabama

(1) The rule as stated in the text ordinarily applies, notwithstanding under statutory provisions, plaintiff partner is individually liable for the firm debt, and may be sued individually and alone therefor —Stinson v Lanier, 134 So 793, 223 Ala. 62—57 C J. p 463 note 55 [c]

(2) The text rule does not apply where the debt of the partnership is due by judgment, bond, covenant, or promise in writing —Bradley Fertilizer Co. v Pollock, 16 So 138, 104 Ala 402—57 C.J p 463 note 55 [c] (1).

a statute providing that, if two or more persons are jointly bound by contract, an action thereon may be brought against all or any of them at plaintiff's option[93] Similarly, it has been held that, in an action by a partner on an individual claim, a debt of the partnership of which he is a member may be counterclaimed under a statute making partnership liability for partnership debts joint and several;[94] and, under a statute providing that a counterclaim may be any cause of action in favor of defendants, or some of them, or plaintiffs, or some of them, and that it may be pleaded in any action for the recovery of money, and may be a cause of action arising either on contract or tort, it has been held that defendant, in an action by a partner on a personal claim, may set up as a counterclaim a cause of action against the partnership.[95]

Suit by partners in individual capacity. In a suit by plaintiffs in their individual capacity to enforce rights which they assert they have as joint owners of the assets of a partnership, a counterclaim against plaintiffs individually may be asserted.[96]

b. In Actions against Individual Partner

Ordinarily, in an action against one partner for a debt due by him, a debt due to his firm cannot be pleaded by way of set-off, counterclaim, compensation, or reconvention.

Ordinarily, in an action against one partner for a debt due by him, a debt due to his firm cannot be pleaded by way of set-off,[97] counterclaim,[98] compensation,[99] or reconvention.[1] This has been held to be true notwithstanding defendant is the only solvent member of the firm,[2] or, under a statute so providing, partners may be held individually liable for partnership debts.[3] Furthermore, in an action against a partner he cannot set off a claim he holds against his firm.[4]

On the other hand, if goods furnished by a partnership are charged to an individual partner, and are by him furnished to plaintiff, the debt may be set off against plaintiff's demand.[5] Where one member of a partnership is sued individually for the entire amount of a partnership debt, he may counterclaim a debt due from plaintiff to the partnership, arising out of the same transaction,[6] and a partner may recoup a claim arisirg out of the same transaction in which he was jointly interested with another as partner.[7] In an action against one partner on an individual obligation given for a partnership debt, defendant may avail himself of any recoupment available to the partners in a suit on the debt against them[8] Where plaintiff is individually indebted to defendant on a claim not founded on a tort or breach of covenant, defendant may set off such debt against his individual debt to plaintiff, founded on a note, even though defendant's demand arose out of former partnership transactions.[9] Advances made to plaintiff by a partner acting in his individual capacity may be asserted as a set-off against a debt which the partner contracted as an individual acting through the other partner as his agent[10]

Assignment to defendant. Where the claim against, or the indebtedness of plaintiff to, the firm has been assigned to the individual defendant partner with plaintiff's consent, the claim or debt may be set off.[11]

Consent of other partners. A partnership debt may be set off in an action against an individual partner if the other partners assent to its use for that purpose,[12] and if no rights of third persons have intervened before such assent was given,[13] but it has been held that the mere assent of the partnership alone that the firm debt might be set off is insufficient without the assent of plaintiff,[14] and that assent of the partners at the trial to a partnership claim being counterclaimed against an individual debt of a partner does not make it a proper counterclaim within a statute defining counterclaims as "(1) A cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction, set forth in the complaint, as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action; (2) in an action on contract, any other cause of action on contract, existing at the commencement of the action."[15]

The general rule is that a debt due from an individual partner, or from less than all of the partners, cannot be set off or be made the subject of a counterclaim in an action by the firm unless the other partners consent.

Subject to the exceptions and limitations hereinafter enumerated, the general rule is that a debt due from an individual partner,[16] or from less than all of the partners,[17] cannot be set off in an action by the firm. It is of no importance that defendant may not have had notice of the existence of the partnership,[18] or that the member of the firm against whom the demand exists represented that he was a creditor of the firm and that he had been authorized to manage the business thereof.[19] It has been held that the general rule applies, even though the partner against whom the set-off is claimed is the real owner of the business, and the other only a nominal partner,[20] and to executed, as well as to executory, contracts.[21] As between a partnership debt and a debt to the partners as tenants in common the principles of set-off are not applicable, the demands not being due in the same right.[22]

In accordance with the rule with respect to set-off, a debt due from an individual partner,[23] or from less than all of the partners,[24] cannot be made the subject of a counterclaim in an action by the firm, or the subject of a plea of compensation.[25] In a suit by a partnership in which defendant interposes a reconventional demand, plaintiff cannot set up a debt due an individual member of the firm in compensation of a debt due by the firm.[26] Under a statute allowing the courts to grant a defendant "any affirmative relief to which he may be entitled," it has been held that a defendant, sued by partners on a demand of the firm, may set up and obtain judgment on a demand held by him against one of the firm only.[27] A maker of a joint and several note payable to a firm may, in an action by the firm against him and the comaker, set up a counterclaim due him from the firm.[28]

Consent. Where all the partners consent that a debt owing by one of them shall be set off against the debt owing to all of them, such debt may be set off[29] or counterclaimed[30] in an action by the firm, and it has been held that such an agreement operates with full force and effect against an assignee of the partnership,[31] or of their debtor,[32] provided the consent of all the partners was obtained before the interest of the assignee arose, but not otherwise.[33] The consent may be either express[34] or implied,[35]

Evidence of assent

(1) It has been held that proof of assent of all of the partners should be clear and satisfactory.—Wise v. Copley, 36 Ga. 508

(2) However, it has also been said that slight evidence will be sufficient to establish such assent.—Warder v. Newdigate, 11 B. Mon., Ky., 174, 52 Am. D. 567—57 C.J. p. 467 note 22

and it has been held that it is not necessary to show even that all the members of the firm knew of the agreement, but that it will be sufficient to show that the partner who made it, by previous assent, express or implied, between the partners, was authorized to bind the firm by such an agreement.[36]

Permitting member to appear as sole owner; pretended partnership. Where the members of a firm permit one of their members to conduct their business as the sole owner thereof, they ordinarily subject themselves, in a joint action by them, to the same right of set-off by defendant as he would have had in a several action by the partner with whom he dealt.[37] It has been held that, where a pretended partnership is a mere sham resorted to as a cover to prevent creditors of one of the alleged partners from reaching his property, defendant may counterclaim a debt against him as being the real owner of the business.[38]

Formation or dissolution of partnership; separate partnerships. Where an individual makes a contract and thereafter forms with another a partnership which endeavors unsuccessfully to carry out the contract, defendant in an action by the firm to recover for goods furnished under the contract may recoup his damages for breach of the contract[39] In an action by former partners, defendant cannot recoup claims against a single partner arising out of independent matters after the dissolution of the partnership.[40]

While it has been held that, in an action by a firm, defendant can set off a debt contracted with the members thereof when doing business together as another partnership,[41] it has also been held that, in an action to recover on a partnership demand, defendant cannot set off a demand against another partnership having the same members as the first.[42] Where a partnership has been reorganized so as to contain different members, in an action on a demand due the new partnership, defendant cannot set off a claim against the old partnership[43]

d. In Actions against Firm

In an action against a partnership for a partnership debt, the general rule, in the absence of a statute otherwise providing, is to the effect that the claim of an individual partner is not available as a set-off or counterclaim, and this is true, although the partner seeking to make use of his claim in this manner is the only one served with process.

In an action against a partnership for a partnership debt, the general rule, in the absence of a statute otherwise providing, is to the effect that the claim of an individual partner is not available as a set-off[44] or counterclaim,[45] and this is true, although the partner seeking to make use of his claim in this manner is the only one served with process;[46] but in some jurisdictions it has been held that separate claims of partners are available as set-offs in an action against a partnership for a partnership debt.[47] A claim of an individual partner may be available as a set-off against an obligation of the firm where a statute provides that persons jointly liable on contracts or obligations shall be severally liable also,[48] or where a creditor of a firm avails himself of a statute authorizing a suit against one partner for the obligations of all.[49] It has been held that a partner may offset his separate claim against an obligation sought to be enforced against the partnership where the contract sued on is the joint and several obligation of defendant and plaintiffs ask for a several judgment against them which by statute may be entered on a partnership obligation against one person.[50]

Ordinarily, in an action against a partnership, defendants cannot set off a debt due to another partnership composed of some, but not all, of defendant partners,[51] but they may set off or counterclaim a demand in favor of the partnership;[52] and, if only one of the partners answers, he is entitled to set off any claim which his firm has against plaintiff, which could have been asserted by way of counter-

claim.[53] In an action against a partnership, one partner may avail himself of a counterclaim in favor of the partnership to defeat plaintiff's recovery, although he answers separately,[54] and it has been held that, where a suit is brought against defendants on a contract made by them as a firm, they may use a demand of the firm against plaintiff as a set-off.[55]

Consent to set-off. Where all the members of a partnership agree that a debt owing to one of them may be applied in payment of a demand existing against the firm, such individual debt is a proper subject of a set-off against a partnership debt.[56]

Compensation. While compensation of partnership and individual debts does not take place by operation of law, in a suit against the partnership for a debt, an individual demand of a partner against plaintiff may, by way of defense or exception, offset or oppose a compensation of this demand to that of plaintiff.[57] In an action against a partnership for a debt, brought by an assignee of a creditor, under an assignment with notice to the partnership, defendants cannot compensate by way of exception a debt due by the assignor to a member of the partnership individually.[58]

e. In Actions against Firm and Individual Partners

Ordinarily, where an action is brought on a partnership liability not only against the partnership but also against its members individually, a defendant may plead as set-off a debt due him individually.

Ordinarily, where an action is brought on a partnership liability not only against the partnership but also against its members individually, a defendant may plead as a set-off a debt due him individually.[59] In such an action one or more defendants may set up as a counterclaim in their individual answers any claim which the firm has against plaintiff,[60] although all the partners are not served in the action and, therefore, do not answer.[61] Under a statute providing that a counterclaim must state a cause of action in favor of all defendants in the action, an account for family necessaries sold by a partnership to plaintiff's family was held not pleadable as a counterclaim in a suit against the firm and the individual partners where plaintiff's husband was one of the partners.[62]

(1) In General

In equity, an individual debt of one of the partners cannot, as a rule, be set off against a partnership debt, or vice versa, the rule being that equity on this subject follows the law, in the absence of special grounds for equitable interposition.

Claim barred by statute of limitations
When a partner is sued on a partnership debt and there exists a demand in favor of the partnership which, had the firm instead of the partner been sued, could be set off, but which would not support an independent action because barred by the statute of limitations, equity will give relief—Fowler v. Bellinger, 37 So. 225, 140 Ala. 240.

ual members thereof, it has been held that the court may permit the individual defendants to plead a counterclaim of which they claim to be joint owners where the court can dispose of all the issues raised by the pleadings and the rights of third persons are not involved.[69] Even where set-off is allowable in equity, a partnership accounting with all the partners made parties is essential in order to adjudicate the interest of the individual partner involved.[70]

Nonresidence. It has been held that, if one partner of a nonresident firm is individually indebted to a resident debtor of that firm, in a suit by the firm against such resident, he may plead the debt of the partner to him as an equitable set-off.[71] However, it has also been held that the mere fact that plaintiff and the partnership, of which he is a member and which is a debtor of defendant, are nonresidents does not amount to such a special equitable circumstance as will take the case out of the general rule against the set-off of a partnership debt against an individual debt and authorize the admission of the equitable set-off[72]

(2) Insolvency

In an action involving partnership and individual debts and demands, the insolvency of one of the parties is very generally recognized as a sufficient ground for the allowance of a set-off in equity, but the right to a set-off on this ground is not an absolute one.

In an action involving partnership and individual debts and demands, the insolvency of one of the parties is very generally recognized as a sufficient ground for the allowance of a set-off in equity,[73] but the right to a set-off on this ground is not an absolute one, and the rights of all parties concerned must be considered in order to determine what is equity.[74]

Debt owing by firm against individual claim of partner. A debt owing by a firm may be set off against a claim of an individual partner of the firm, where the firm is insolvent,[75] or where only the partner owning the claim is insolvent[76] It has been held, however, that in an action on contract brought by one member of a firm on an individual claim defendant may not avail himself of a claim against the firm as a set-off, on the ground of the insolvency of plaintiff's copartners, in the absence of an averment that the firm is insolvent[77]

Individual debt of partner against debt due firm. It has been held that a court of equity will not permit a set-off of a separate debt due from one partner against a joint debt due to the partnership on the mere ground of the insolvency of that partner alone,[78] but there is authority to the contrary.[79] An individual partner may, in equity, set off his own judgment against an insolvent debtor who seeks to enforce a judgment against the firm[80]

Debt due firm against individual debt of partner. In an action by an insolvent debtor of a firm against an individual partner, it has been held that plaintiff's indebtedness to the partnership may be set off where all the partners assent,[81] but not otherwise[82]

Debt of partner to firm against debt of firm to partner. In a suit in equity by a member of an insolvent partnership to dissolve and settle such partnership, the individual indebtedness of the partner to his firm may be set off against plaintiff's claim for an amount lent by him to the firm[83]

Debt of one partnership to another cannot be set off in a suit in equity brought by the representatives of a member of one firm, who has died since the contracting of the debt, against one member of the other, since the claims of the parties are not due in the same right, and could not have been set off in the lifetime of plaintiffs' intestate.[84]

(1) In General

While it has been held that defendant, in a suit by a surviving partner to recover a debt due to the firm, may set off a debt due to him from the surviving partner alone, it has also been held that in an action by the surviving members of a partnership to recover a debt due the firm, defendant cannot offset debts due him by individual partners.

It has been held or stated without qualification that, in a suit by a surviving partner to recover a debt due to the firm, defendant may set off a debt due to him from the surviving partner alone,[85] but this rule has been qualified, under some decisions, so as to permit such a set-off provided it does not appear that the partnership creditors have any lien on the account sued on[86] or provided there is no equitable interest in another which the law can protect.[87] On the other hand, it has been held that in an action by surviving members of a partnership to recover a debt due the firm, defendant cannot offset debts due him by individual partners,[88] and that in an action by a surviving partner for a debt due the firm, an individual debt against the deceased partner cannot be set off,[89] even though such deceased partner agreed to pay defendant's claim against him from partnership funds, where it is not shown that the surviving partner had notice of such agreement.[90]

In a suit by a surviving partner in his own name on an obligation for a debt belonging to the partnership, but executed to him, defendant may set off a claim against the partnership held by him,[91] without reference to the solvency or insolvency of the members of the firm.[92] It has been held or said that, where a person who is a surviving partner sues for a debt owing to him individually, defendant may set off a partnership debt against it,[93] but there is authority to the contrary.[94] In an action by a partnership, defendant may set off a demand against a former partnership of which plaintiffs are the surviving members and to which they succeeded.[95]

In an action by a surviving partner and another against a partnership for the balance of an account, defendants cannot plead by way of set-off a debt to them from one of plaintiffs alone, the demands not being mutual.[96]

(2) Actions against Surviving Partner

In an action against a surviving partner to enforce a partnership debt, he may, ordinarily, set off or counterclaim a debt due him in his own right, but it has been held that unliquidated damages sustained by the surviving partner cannot be counterclaimed in such an action.

In an action against a surviving partner to enforce a partnership debt, he may, ordinarily, set off[97] or counterclaim[98] a debt due him in his own right, since, as respects plaintiff, he may treat the debt as his own,[99] but it has been held that unliquidated damages sustained by the surviving partner cannot be counterclaimed in such an action.[1] It has also been held[2] or said[3] that in an action against a surviving partner on a demand against him individually, he may set off a claim against plaintiff in his favor as a surviving partner, but there is authority to the contrary.[4] In an action against the surviving partner and the widow and sole heir of deceased partner, who have formed a new firm, defendant may set off a debt due the old firm in an action against the new firm.[5] In an action by the wife of a deceased partner against the surviving partner, on a note made by the firm, the defendant cannot be permitted to set off an indebtedness alleged to be due him from the estate of the deceased partner on the ground that the money lent to the firm, for which the note was given, was advanced to plaintiff by the deceased partner when his estate was in fact insolvent.[6]

(3) Actions by or against Administrators of Deceased Partners

In a suit by an administrator for a debt due his decedent, defendant may set off a debt due him by the firm of which decedent was a member, where by statute the estate of a deceased partner is liable for the whole debt of the firm of which he is a member, whether the surviving partner is solvent or insolvent.

In a suit by an administrator for a debt due his decedent, defendant may set off a debt due him by the firm of which decedent was a member, where by statute the estate of a deceased partner is liable for the whole debt of the firm of which he is a member, whether the surviving partner is solvent or insolvent;[7] and in an action by the administrator of a deceased partner against the surviving partner to recover the share of the deceased partner in the partnership assets, defendant may set off an indebtedness of decedent to him.[8] So, also, the administrators of a surviving partner may set off a partnership debt in an action against them in their representative capacity on a note made by the survivor.[9]

§ 53. —— Debt or Demand of Husband or Wife of Party to Action

a. Actions by husband
b. Actions against husband
c. Actions by wife
d. Actions against wife
e. Actions by husband and wife
f. Actions against husband and wife

a. Actions by Husband

As a general rule, in an action by a husband, defendant cannot assert for the purpose of set-off or counterclaim a claim against the wife or a claim against the husband and wife jointly.

As a general rule, in an action by a husband, defendant cannot assert as a set-off[10] or counterclaim[11] a claim against the wife. It usually is not permissible, in such an action, to set off a claim for damages resulting from the tortious act of plaintiff's wife, it not appearing that the husband consented to the tort or gave to it his subsequent sanction,[12] and in an action by plaintiff alone to recover money overpaid by him on a mortgage given by himself and wife on his wife's property, the amount due on another mortgage assumed by the wife as part of the purchase price of the property involved cannot be offset, because she is not a party to the action.[13] Where a husband sues an executor to recover a legacy to his wife, the executor may set off a debt by the husband to the testator, where the husband may make such legacy his own by any step which amounts to a reduction of it to possession.[14]

A claim against husband and wife jointly ordinarily cannot be set off[15] or counterclaimed,[16] in an action by the husband.

b. Actions against husband

Ordinarily, in an action against the husband, he cannot plead by way of set-off or counterclaim a claim in the right of the wife, or a debt due to, or owned by, him and his wife jointly.

Ordinarily, in an action against the husband, he cannot plead by way of set-off,[17] counterclaim,[18] compensation,[19] or reconvention,[20] a claim in the right of the wife, or constituting her separate property, and he cannot assert as a set-off or counterclaim a debt due to, or claim owned by, him and his wife jointly.[21] Accordingly, it has been held that a note in the hands of a defendant, given by plaintiff, but payable to a third person, although belonging to defendant in right of his wife, is not available as an offset, unless there is an express promise on the part of plaintiff, to pay the amount called for by the note, to defendant.[22] A husband is not precluded from recovering on a plea of set-off for board furnished because the wife did not join in the plea,[23] and he may plead by way of a set-off a claim for services rendered by his wife, where the earnings of the wife belong to the husband.[24] Rental of premises owned by husband and wife as tenants by the entirety may be set off in an action against the husband by the party owing it.[25]

Chose in action of which wife died seized Since a husband cannot recover choses in action of which his wife died seized, and to which he is entitled as a distributee, except through administration, such claims are not due to him personally, and cannot, therefore, be set off against a personal debt due by him to plaintiff[26]

c. Actions by Wife

In an action by a wife to enforce a claim due her as her separate property, defendant cannot ordinarily set off or counterclaim a claim against the husband.

In an action by a wife to enforce a claim due her as her separate property, defendant ordinarily cannot set off[27] or counterclaim[28] a claim against the husband. So, in an action by a wife to reduce to possession a chose in action accruing to her in her own right after marriage, the husband's marital right not having attached, a claim against the husband cannot be set off,[29] and, where, in an action by a wife in her own name to recover judgment on notes and for a decree foreclosing a mortgage given to secure them, the court erroneously refuses a motion to have the husband made a party plaintiff as being the real party in interest, defendant cannot counterclaim a demand against the husband.[30]

In an action by a wife for services, defendant has been permitted to set off a debt due from the husband, on the ground that the wife's earnings belong to the husband,[31] and, where the wife is only the nominal plaintiff and the husband is the real party in interest, a debt due from the husband may be set off[32] In an action by a wife for moneys had and received which belong to her statutory separate estate, it has been held that defendant can set off an amount due to him for necessary family supplies furnished to plaintiff and her husband, for which, by virtue of statute, her estate may be held liable.[33]

Action by wife to secure set-off. In view of the rule requiring mutuality of demands in order to warrant a set-off, a wife cannot ordinarily maintain an action to secure a set-off of her claim for damages against a judgment against her husband to which she was not a party,[34] even though defendant is insolvent and a nonresident of the state.[35]

d. Actions against Wife

In an action against a wife she cannot ordinarily set off or plead in compensation a debt claimed in the right of the husband.

In an action against a wife she cannot ordinarily set off[36] or plead in compensation[37] a debt claimed in the right of her husband. However, in an action against a wife on a running account for services rendered and materials expended in improving her property, credit for materials returned is a proper set-off, although credited in a statement rendered to her husband, where it appears that the husband acted as her agent[38] Also, in an action to foreclose a mortgage against a wife, she has been held entitled to plead a counterclaim for a debt due to her by the mortgagee for services rendered by her, where the husband himself makes no claim for such services, and she is entitled to her earnings as separate property[39]

e. Actions by Husband and Wife

In an action by a husband and wife based on a chose of action or claim which is the separate property of the wife, defendant usually cannot set off a separate claim against the husband or a debt due by the husband and wife jointly.

39. N Y—Carver v. Wagner, 64 N Y S. 747, 51 App Div. 47.

In an action by a husband and wife based on a chose of action of the wife, defendant usually cannot set off a separate claim against the husband for the reason that a wife's right of survivorship in respect of choses in action belonging to her, before or after coverture, until reduced to his possession by her husband, is a right treated by the law as an interest of substance and importance and entitled to protection.[40] Accordingly, where husband and wife join in an action on a chose in action owned by her before marriage,[41] or on a chose in action accruing to the wife after marriage,[42] a set-off of the husband's separate debt is not permissible, since the right of survivorship in the wife might thereby be defeated.[43] In like manner, in an action by husband and wife based on a debt or claim which is the separate property of the wife, a debt of the husband cannot ordinarily be set off[44] or pleaded in compensation.[45] It has been held that, where husband and wife sue for property claimed through the wife, and during the pendency of the suit the husband sells his interest and dies, a court of equity will allow a credit for the purchase money to be set off against the wife where the purchaser had the possession,[46] but in order to set off a debt of a deceased husband against his widow the equity must be clearly shown, and, although the husband died insolvent, if the widow is not insolvent and the demands are not connected, and no understanding is shown in the parties that one demand should be set off against the other, equity will not allow the set-off.[47]

In actions on debts or claims owned by husband and wife jointly. In an action by husband and wife on debts or claims owned by them jointly, a claim against the husband individually cannot be set off.[48]

Separate claim against wife When husband and wife join in an action on a promise made to the wife, it has been held that a debt secured by a contract made by the wife after marriage cannot be pleaded as a set-off,[49] but, in an action brought by the original obligee of a bond for the use of a married woman and her husband, it has been held that the maker may set off an account for medical services rendered for the married woman before her marriage, the wife and her husband being plaintiffs beneficially interested in the action,[50] and it has further been held that in a suit by husband and wife on a note given to them jointly for a debt created with defendants, by the dealing of the wife with the consent of the husband, defendants may set off an account not included in the note, created in the same course of dealing.[51]

Joint claim against husband and wife. Where husband and wife join in an action on a chose in action accruing to her during coverture, a debt due by the husband and wife jointly cannot be pleaded as a set-off,[52] for the reason that a joint promise by them would, in any conceivable case, be void at law as regards the wife, and would in effect be the promise of the husband.[53]

f. Actions against Husband and Wife

Ordinarily, where husband and wife are sued on a joint liability, a claim against plaintiff existing solely in favor of one spouse may not be asserted as a set-off or counterclaim. In an action on a joint and several obligation of a husband and wife a separate demand in favor of the husband may be counterclaimed.

Ordinarily, where husband and wife are sued on a joint liability, the husband cannot set off a debt due him[54] or set up by way of cross demand a claim in his favor against plaintiff.[55] In such an action, the husband and wife cannot set up by way of cross demand[56] or set-off[57] a claim against plaintiff existing solely in favor of the wife; and the wife cannot plead as a counterclaim a claim against plaintiff existing in her favor alone.[58] Where the cause of action is only against the separate property of the wife, and the husband is joined as a technical party only, debts due from plaintiff to the husband cannot be pleaded as a counterclaim.[59]

In equity the rigid rules of a statute relating to set-off may be relaxed so as to allow, in an action against husband and wife, a set-off which the law would refuse.[60]

When suit is brought against husband and wife on a note executed by the wife dum sola, it has been held that the husband may set off one half of the amount paid by him before suit brought on a judgment which was recovered against the wife dum sola and plaintiff, on a note executed by them jointly,[61] but that he cannot set off such a payment made by him after the institution of the suit.[62] While it has been held that, in an action against husband and wife to foreclose a mortgage on his property executed by them, a claim against plaintiff in favor of the wife and others cannot be set off, she having no individual or proprietary title to the land mortgaged or being in any way liable for the debt,[63] it has also been held that in a suit to foreclose a mortgage on the wife's separate property given by husband and wife to secure the payment of a loan made to the husband, a cross complaint in the nature of set-off for moneys alleged to be due and owing by plaintiff to the husband may properly be pleaded.[64]

On joint and several obligation. In an action on a joint and several obligation or liability of a husband and wife a separate demand in favor of the husband may be counterclaimed.[65]

Judgment in favor of wife against judgment against husband. Where judgment in an action against husband and wife is rendered against the husband and in favor of the wife for costs, the judgment against the husband may be discharged pro tanto by offsetting the smaller judgment in favor of the wife, under a statute providing that all property acquired by either the husband or the wife after marriage shall be community property, subject to the husband's debts.[66]

Good faith

(1) The statutory requirement that a counterclaim against plaintiff's assignor, to be available against plaintiff, must belong to defendant in "good faith" does not relate to the merits of the counterclaim but rather to defendant's acquisition thereof—Chas Chipman's Sales Co. v Ely & Walker Dry Goods Co, 48 N.Y S 2d

generally subject to any right of compensation[70] held by the obligor against the assignor before and at the time of the assignment or notice thereof, and this rule applies, although the assignor is bankrupt.[71] In respect of such claims, the assignee ordinarily has no greater rights than the assignor,[72] and the obligor is not by reason of the assignment put in a worse position than if the action were by the assignor.[73] However, the obligor is not by the assignment placed in a better position, and his claim against the assignor, in order to be available by way of recoupment, set-off, or counterclaim against the assignee, must satisfy the general rules as discussed supra §§ 12–53 with respect to the requisites therefor,[74] such as the requirement that the claim constitute a valid cause of action,[75] and the requirements as to the subject matter of the claim and its relationship to the cause of action sued on.[76] Under some statutes, defendant is not permitted to set off against an assignee a claim against the assignor arising from a transaction independent of that which gave rise to the obligation assigned.[77]

Where the cause of action on which defendant's cross demand is based depends for its existence on the nonexistence of the assigned cause of action, it cannot be urged as a counterclaim against the assignee.[78] No set-off can be successfully asserted which the debtor could not have been heard to insist on.[79] The right to a set-off is preserved where there has been an assignment of a claim solely for the benefit of the debtor who owes the claim assigned.[80]

Assignee's lack of knowledge. Although the assignee takes without knowing of the outstanding claim, it may still be asserted against him as a set-off.[81] Defendant may have recoupment despite the assignee's lack of knowledge of the existence

Where all the contract rights and liabilities of one person were transferred to another, the transferee was held to have taken the liabilities in the condition in which they were in the hands of the transferor and to be entitled to the benefit of any set-offs available to the latter at the time of transfer.[83]

b. Existence and Maturity of Claim at Time of Assignment or Notice

(1) In general
(2) Claims arising subsequent to assignment
(3) Claims maturing subsequent to assignment
(4) Claims arising from same contract or transaction
(5) Judgment against assignor after assignment

(1) In General

As a general rule, whether or not a claim against the assignor sought to be raised by way of set-off or counterclaim against the assigned cause of action must have been acquired and matured at the time of the assignment or notice thereof is dependent on the terms of the statutes.

The diversity of decisions as to whether or not a claim against the assignor sought to be raised by way of set-off or counterclaim against the assigned cause of action must have been acquired and matured at the time of the assignment or notice thereof arises in part from the varying phraseology of the different statutes.[85] Statutory provisions to the effect that, when cross demands have existed under such circumstances that, if one had brought an action against the other, a counterclaim or set-off could have been set up, neither can be deprived of the benefit thereof by the assignment of the other, and those to the effect that set-off or counterclaim may be had against an assignee if the demand is such as might have been set off against such plaintiff or such assignee while the contract belonged to him are substantially the same;[86] and in each the test of whether the debtor preserves his set-off or counterclaim depends on whether he could have set it up before the assignment, that is, while the contract belonged to the assignor [87] The effect of a statutory provision to the effect that, in case of assignment, the action by the assignee is without prejudice to any set-off or other defense existing at the time of, or before notice of, the assignment, as respects defendant's right to interpose a set-off or counterclaim, is that, until he has notice of the assignment, he occupies the same position as if the assigned demand was still held by the assignor.[88] Such a statute merely expresses what was the equitable effect of an assignment in the absence of any statute.[89] Where, however, provisions of the former character exist, although in conjunction with provisions of the latter character, it has been held that the former are operative and control matters of set-off and counterclaim between the parties,[90] at least where the latter provisions appear as part of the practice act whose chief purpose is to deal with the procedure for the enforcement of rights rather than the elements going to make up the existence of the rights to be enforced.[91]

"Now allowed." Under statutes declaring that, in case of an assignment of a thing in action, the action by the assignee shall be without prejudice to any set-off or other defense now allowed, it has been held that the effect of the language used is to preserve to the debtor the same remedial rights as existed under the law preceding the adoption of the statute without change,[92] and this is true, although the nature of the claims available under such rights is altered by another statutory provision adopted at the same time;[93] but there is other authority holding, where at the time of the enactment of such statutory provision the legislature by further enactment adopted portions of the statutes of set-off and counterclaim of another state, that the words "now allowed" are used in contradistinc-

tion to the character of claims that could be set off before such adoption,[94] and that the phrase refers to demands of such character as might be set off by virtue of the provisions thus adopted, rather than to the law prior to the enactment,[95] the words "now allowed" referring to allowance under the law of the state whose set-off statutes were adopted concurrently with the provision in question.[96]

When demand is liquidated. In an action on a liquidated demand held by plaintiff as assignee, an unliquidated claim existing in favor of defendant against the assignor at the time of the assignment has been held not a proper set-off.[97]

(2) Claims Arising Subsequent to Assignment

As a general rule, claims arising in favor of the defendant against the assignor subsequent to the assignment or notice thereof cannot be set off or counterclaimed against an assigned cause of action.

As a general rule, claims arising in favor of defendant against the assignor subsequent to the assignment[98] or notice thereof[99] cannot be set off or counterclaimed against the claim of the assignee, at least where they accrue on independent contracts or transactions separate from that giving rise to the assigned cause of action,[1] even though they had their origin in transactions previous to the giving of notice.[2] It has been held that defendant may set off or counterclaim against the assignee claims against the assignor arising or acquired prior to notice of the assignment,[3] even though such claim was not acquired or did not arise until after the assignment,[4] at least where the assigned demand is in its nature not assignable at law,[5] but it has also been held that a claim against the assignor arising out of an independent contract or transaction after the assignment but before notice thereof is not available as a set-off or counterclaim against the assignee,[6] and it has been held that an assigned cause of action is not subject to set-off or counterclaim arising out of an independent contract, whether the contract was made before or after notice of the assignment.[7]

(3) Claims Maturing Subsequent to Assignment

Whether or not a claim by the obligor against the assignor, not matured at the time of the assignment or notice thereof, is available as a set-off or counterclaim against the assigned cause of action is largely a question of statutory construction.

The question of the allowance as set-off or counterclaim of a demand unmatured at the time of the assignment against an assigned matured demand is largely one of statutory construction.[8] Under some statutes, as, for example, those providing in effect that, when cross demands have existed under such circumstances, if one had brought an action against the other, a counterclaim or set-off could have been set up, neither can be deprived of the benefit thereof by the assignment of the other, or those providing in effect that, if an action is founded on an assigned contract, a demand existing against the assignor, or any assignee, at the time of the assignment, and belonging to defendant, in good faith, before notice of such assignment, may be set off if the demand is such as might have been set off against such assignor or assignee, when the contract belonged to him, it is held that a debtor, when sued by the assignee of the claim, cannot set off or counterclaim against such assignee demands which the debtor has against the assignor which matured after the assignment[9] or notice thereof,[10] although such claim became due before suit;[11] and further, no statements or conduct of the debtor, unassented to by the assignee, on receipt of the notice of assignment, can operate to change this rule so as to make such claims available for this purpose.[12] However, the operation of this rule is limited to cases where the set-off or counterclaim arises out of a contract or transaction independent of that on which the assigned cause of action is based[13]

It has been held that a claim against the assignor not matured at the time of the assignment is not available as a counterclaim or set-off against the assigned cause of action, although it matures before notice of the assignment,[14] though, as discussed infra § 56, a claim which has matured at the time of the assignment is available as a set-off or counterclaim, even though it is not acquired by defendant until after the assignment, but before notice thereof; but it has also been held that a demand, not due at the time of assignment, but which has become due before notice thereof, is available against the assignee as a set-off or counterclaim.[15]

Under some statutes a claim may be set off or counterclaimed against the assignee, in a suit on the assigned obligation, although the claim thus asserted was not due and payable at or before the assignment,[16] and the fact that the demand claimed as an offset has not matured when defendant receives notice of the assignment of his obligation does not render it unavailable as a set-off or counterclaim;[17] it is sufficient if the transaction out of which the claim arises commenced before defendant was informed of the transfer,[18] and it is not essential that the liability of the assignor should be complete at that time.[19] A demand, although unmatured at the time of notice, may be successfully pleaded, where it is of such a character that it could have been pleaded against the assignor, provided defendant acquired it before notice of assignment and provided further that it was existing at the commencement of the action[20] Whether or not the demand was due and suable before notice constitutes no element in the determination of whether it existed before notice so as to render it available as set-off or counterclaim.[21]

Stipulation in assignment for allowance. If the assignor at the time of assignment requires the assignee to recognize and allow the debtor's offset, such offset is available, although it does not mature until after the assignment.[22]

(4) Claims Arising from Same Contract or Transaction

As a general rule a claim by the defendant against the assignor arising from the same contract or transaction as the assigned cause of action may be availed of by way of recoupment, set-off or counterclaim without regard to the fact that the claim did not exist or mature until after the assignment or notice thereof.

22. N.Y.—Fort v. McCully, 59 Barb. 87.

As a general rule, a claim by defendant against the assignor arising from the same contract or transaction as the assigned cause of action may be availed of by way of recoupment, set-off, or counterclaim without regard to the fact that the claim did not exist or mature until after the assignment or notice thereof.[23] Where a claim is assigned, defendant may, in an action by the assignee, have recoupment for a default in performance by the assignor of his obligations under the executory contract on which the assigned claim was based, although such default occurred after the assignment[24] and after notice thereof to defendant,[25] or for a default which existed at such time, but was discovered subsequent thereto;[26] and this has been held both where the claim assigned was due and payable at the time of assignment and notice,[27] and where it had not matured at that time.[28] The right of recoupment is not affected by the fact that the assignee does not actually know at the time of assignment of those terms in the contract which give rise to the obligation asserted in recoupment.[29]

(5) Judgment against Assignor after Assignment

It has been held that a judgment against the assignor, rendered after the assignment or notice thereof, or the claim on which such judgment is based, is not available as a set-off or counterclaim against the assigned cause of action, but the rule has been relaxed where its application would be inequitable.

It has been held that a judgment against the assignor, rendered after the assignment or notice thereof, or the claim on which such judgment is based, is not available as a set-off or counterclaim against the assigned cause of action; the claim is not available because it is merged in the judgment; the judgment is not available because it was not in existence or mature at the time of the assignment or notice thereof[30] Other authorities deny this rule[31] or qualify it and hold that the obtaining of a judgment under such circumstances does not bar the debtor's right to assert his demand as an offset where such a result would be inequitable,[32] as where the assignor is insolvent and the judgment was recovered without knowledge of the assignment.[33]

Dormant judgment Although the judgment obtained against the assignor asserted as a set-off is dormant at the time the judgment against which it is sought to be set off is assigned, it is still available as a set-off against the assignee[34]

c. Assigned Cause of Action Not Mature at Time of Assignment

Dependent on statutory provisions, a claim by the obligor may or may not be available against the assignor of a cause of action which was not mature at the time of the assignment.

Under statutory provisions limiting the availability of set-off or counterclaim to such claims as were allowable against an assigned demand when it could have been asserted against such demand at the time of the assignment and as against the original owner, defendant cannot set off or counterclaim for a demand which matured at or before the assignment against a cause of action by the assignee which was not mature at the time of the assignment,[35] such as a cause of action based on the performance of a contract executory at the time of assignment.[36] In like manner, set-off or counterclaim of demands unmatured at the time of assignment against assigned causes of action unmatured at such time has been refused.[37] It has been intimated, however, that this rule may be applicable to prevent unavailability of a matured claim as a set-off or counterclaim only where the formerly unmatured demand, asserted by the assignee, was, at the time of assignment, merely a right under an executory contract to demand payment after performance of the assignor's obligations under the contract, which are unperformed at the time of the assignment,[38] and may not be applicable to prevent set-off of such matured claim against a liquidated demand, existing as a debt at the time of the assignment, for the payment of money already earned, contingent on nothing, but not yet due and payable at the time of the assignment.[39]

Under statutory provisions to the effect that an action on an assigned claim shall be without prejudice to any set-off existing at the time of or before notice of the assignment, the fact that the contract assigned has not matured at the time of assignment does not deprive defendant of any set-off or counterclaim then held by him against the assignor,[40] or acquired against the assignor before notice of the assignment.[41] Defendant may assert as a set-off or counterclaim to such an obligation, unmatured at the time of the assignment, an obligation of the assignor which is then due and demandable,[42] and defendant has even been permitted to avail himself as an offset against an obligation unmatured at the time of assignment of a demand against the obligor which was likewise unmatured at that time,[43] and even at the time of notice of the assignment,[44] although it has been intimated that in the last mentioned situation, the offset is allowable only where the claim asserted as a set-off or counterclaim matures before or as soon as the assigned claim,[45] but it has been held elsewhere that the respective times with respect to each other at which the claims mature are immaterial.[46]

Assignment and reassignment of executory contract to build. Where one entered into an agreement with a contractor, who assigned the contract to another before there had been any work done under it and before any demand existed against the obligor in favor of the contractor by virtue of the contract, there is authority that the obligor could not set off, against claims by the assignee of the second contractor, after the latter's performance of the contract without notice of any claims against his assignor, an antecedent claim which he held against the first contractor,[47] regardless of any agreement respecting set-off entered into between defendant and the assignor;[48] but it has been held, where a contractor before any performance assigned the contract to another, who so performed as to give rise to a cause of action in favor of the obligor under the contract, and then assigned to a third person, that the obligor could counterclaim against the second assignee for the claim arising against the first assignee by reason of his incomplete performance.[49]

d. Claims against Assignor and Another Jointly, Assignee, and Intermediate Assignees

er claims against intermediate assignees are available as a set-off or counterclaim.

Ordinarily, defendant cannot set off a demand against the assignor of a cause of action and another jointly,[50] and a counterclaim based on such a demand is not allowable.[51] Thus where one of the coobligees in a joint obligation assigns his rights therein to the other, who sues thereon, it has been held that defendant cannot set off a claim against the assigning obligee and another jointly.[52] However, the rule has been held to be otherwise where the assignor was principal and the third person a surety,[53] or where the liability of the third person had been transferred to the assignor prior to his assignment to plaintiff.[54] Where the obligation of the assignor and another is joint and several, it may be availed of by defendant against the assigned cause of action.[55] Where defendant held claims against a number of persons, who also held claims against defendant, and all the others of those so situated with respect to defendant assigned their claims to one of their number, defendant, when sued by that one as assignor, was held entitled as a proper deduction to the sum total of his claims against the assignor and all the assignees,[56] although, had they sued defendant individually, he could not perhaps have deducted his claim against any single one of the persons, because such claim had been ascertained in the mass and not as to individuals.[57]

Claims against assignee. In an action on a contract by an assignee thereof, defendant may set up as a set-off or counterclaim a claim existing directly against the assignee, which defendant holds,[58] subject to the general rules discussed supra § 33 et seq which may restrict the claims which defendant may present to those growing out of the same transaction as plaintiff's claim.[59] Where the assignment is made and the assignee holds the claim assigned solely for the benefit of a third person, the debtor cannot set off against a claim so assigned obligations due directly by the assignee to the debtor.[60]

Claims against Intermediate Assignee. A debtor defendant in an action brought by the last of several assignees of the debt has been permitted, by some authorities, to set off against such debt claims in the nature of a set-off which he held against plaintiff's assignor, an intermediate assignee, prior to assignment and while such intermediate assignee was the owner of the obligation in suit;[61] and, in construing a statute providing that an assignee shall take subject to any set-off or other defense, existing at the time of, or before notice of, the assignment, it has been held that an obligation assigned a number of times will be subject to any set-off or other defense that the maker had against any one or all of the assignees at the date of assignment, or before notice thereof.[62] Elsewhere, however, the authorities announce the contrary conclusion, holding that defendant cannot, as against plaintiff, set off[63] or counterclaim for[64] demands against plaintiff's intermediate assignees, at least in the absence of any fraud in the assignment,[65] unless there is an agreement between the parties allowing it,[66] the result being grounded on the controlling statutory provisions applicable to the transaction.[67] Moreover, even though there has been an actual agreement between the intermediate assignee and the debtor while the former held the debt that claims against him should be allowable as set-offs, that is not necessarily of itself sufficient to make such claims available in that manner after a further assignment;[68] in order to have that effect, the agreement must amount to a binding contract made on a new consideration.[69] Where assignment to intermediate assignee includes assumption by him of all liabilities of his assignor as an express contractual provision, it has been held that as to liabilities incurred by reason of such assumption clause, a plaintiff to whom the claim is assigned by such intermediate assignee stands in the same position as his assignor and takes subject to any offset which might, by virtue of the assumption agreement, be asserted against the latter.[70]

e. Equitable Set-Off

As a general rule, an equitable right of set-off is not defeated by an assignment of the debt.

As a general rule an equitable right of set-off is not defeated by assignment of the debt,[71] at least where the assignee takes with notice [72] Thus, where there are mutual debts, and an express or implied agreement of mutual credit, a court of equity will enforce it against an assignee [73] Equity will not allow a set-off against an assignee of claims against an assignor on mere general equities and in the absence of a showing of some specific ground of equitable set-off;[74] and equity will not allow a set-off against an assignee where to do so would be inequitable,[75] or to any further extent than may be equitable [76] Thus, the rights of equitable assignees will be protected in equity against claims in set-off acquired against the assignor after notice of the assignment [77]

While there is some authority holding that equity will not allow a set-off against an assignee of a claim against the assignor not due at the time of the assignment,[78] or of a claim which has not yet arisen at such time,[79] there is other authority to the contrary,[80] and, on the existence of those equities which move that court to allow set-offs unavailable at law, it has been held that a set-off may be allowed of a claim accruing after commencement of the action.[81] Equity relaxes the rules of the law regarding the effect of the time of assignment or notice, but goes beyond them only when the departure is necessary to prevent wrong and injustice,[82] and, however persuasive defendant's equity, his claim, in order to be effective as a counterclaim, must comply with the statutory requirements concerning offsets in this connection.[83]

Insolvency and nonresidence of assignor. The insolvency of the assignor at the time of assignment is good ground in equity to authorize a set-off against the assignee of claims against the assignor at the time of assignment,[84] especially when coupled with the assignor's nonresidence at the time of assignment;[85] but, where a demand against which a set-off is pleaded on the ground of the debtor's insolvency or nonresidence has been assigned, it must appear, in order that equity set off the demand, that the insolvency or removal occurred before the assignment,[86] or notice thereof [87] In equity, on proof of the nonresidence or insolvency of the assignor at the time of the assignment, it has been held that even an unliquidated claim sounding in tort may be set off against the assignee.[88]

f. Contingent or Secondary Liability

The authorities are not in accord on the question whether a debtor, when sued by the assignee of his debt, can set off against the plaintiff a demand against the assignor arising from the defendant's having become secondarily liable as surety, indorser, or guarantor on a debt wherein the assignor was the principal debtor.

According to some authorities, a debtor, when sued by the assignee of his debt, can set off against plaintiff a demand against the assignor arising from defendant's having become secondarily liable as surety, indorser, or guarantor on a debt wherein the assignor was the principal debtor,[89] although there has been no payment of such contingent claim at the time of the assignment,[90] or at the time of notice of the assignment,[91] especially where such payment has been made at the time that the offer of set-off is made.[92] Furthermore, there is authority to the effect that it is immaterial, in this connection, that the demand on which the debtor is secondarily liable has not matured at the time of assignment of his debt or of notice thereof,[93] but there is other authority to the contrary.[94]

On the other hand, it has been held that a claim, based on the assumption of secondary liability on an obligation of the assignor prior to any assignment of the debt, is not a claim of such character as can constitute a legal or equitable set-off against the assignee of another demand, held by the assignor against the person secondarily liable, where no payment has been made by the latter by reason of his secondary liability until after the assignment of the demand,[95] or, until after notice of such assignment.[96] This result has been reached despite the insolvency of the assignor, the person primarily liable on the claim urged in offset,[97] and although the debtor has, at a period subsequent to the time of assignment or notice, actually paid the assignor's debt whereon the debtor was secondarily liable.[98] Moreover, the status of such latter debt as matured or unmatured at the time of payment has been treated as immaterial in this connection,[99] although elsewhere weight has been accorded to the circumstance that such debt was not yet due at the time of assignment.[1] The rule discussed infra § 56 that a claim against the insolvent assignor purchased with knowledge of the insolvency cannot be set-off against an assigned cause of action has been held to apply where the obligor on the assigned cause of action pays the assignor's debt pursuant to his guaranty so that such payment cannot be set off against the assigned cause of action.[2]

The discharge of his contingent liability on the assignor's obligation, by the debtor secondarily liable thereon, may operate to render the amount thus paid and discharged available as an offset against the assignee, where such payment occurs before the assignment by the principal obligor,[3] or, according to other authority, where it is before notice of the assignment, although after the assignment has in fact been made.[4] It has been held that defendant cannot set off against the assignee a claim as surety for contribution against the assignor as cosurety, although defendant paid the whole debt prior to the assignment.[5]

g. Waiver and Estoppel

A debtor may waive the right to assert a set-off against the assignee, as where by his conduct he induces the assignee to believe that the assigned claim will be met and that there is no defense thereto.

A debtor may waive the right to use a set-off against the assignee.[6] What will amount to such a waiver must depend on the circumstances surrounding each particular case.[7] The debtor by his conduct in inducing the assignee to believe that the obligation will be met, and that there is no defense thereto, may be held to have waived the right to avail himself of a set-off against the assignor in an action by the assignee.[8] A waiver of the right to urge a claim arising from a different transaction as a counterclaim or set-off may be inferred where the obligation to the assignor was incurred with the knowledge and understanding that it would be promptly assigned,[9] but this has been denied.[10] If the debtor promises the assignee of a chose in action to pay the debt to him, he cannot afterward avail himself in set-off of claims he may have against the assignor,[11] at least where the assignee was induced to purchase the obligation in consequence of representations by the obligor that he had no defense to it,[12] and especially where the absolute promise of payment is made after there has been a previous expression of a wish to deduct demands due from the assignor.[13]

There is authority to the effect that a promise by the debtor to pay the assignee will not preclude the former from asserting a set-off, where it has been made without consideration,[14] or where the assignee has not been induced, by means of the promise made to him, to act to his detriment.[15] It has been held that the assignment is a sufficient consideration for a promise by the debtor to pay the debt to the assignee, and may estop him to claim a counterclaim or set-off which would have been available against the assignor.[16] A promise to pay only as much of the assigned demand as may prove to be due after deduction of the obligor's offsets against the assignor is not, it seems, such a promise as precludes the promisor from asserting a set-off.[17] It has been held that, if the right to a set-off is waived or abandoned, even for an instant, the law will not restore it as against an assignee,[18] and that the assignee has the right to insist that it shall have been continuously available.[19] Thus, where defendant has waived the right to set off his claim against the assignor, he may not set it off against the assignee.[20]

Defendant is not precluded from setting up offsets otherwise available, unless he had estopped himself by his admissions or conduct.[21] He cannot be precluded except by some act of his own,[22] and information obtained by the assignee from strangers is not sufficient to raise an estoppel preventing the availability of set-off,[23] particularly where the assignee has neglected to take the precaution to make any inquiries of the debtor regarding the claim assigned to him.[24] In the absence of any element of concealment, a debtor is not estopped to assert demands against the assignor, in set-off against the assignee, merely by reason of the fact that the debtor has not acted affirmatively to notify the assignee of the existence of such demands.[25] Thus, it has been held that a debtor, by merely remaining silent when notified that his debt has been assigned to another, without making any promises with respect to payment, is not precluded from the subsequent assertion against the assigned demand of claims against the assignor;[26] and this is true, although he did, at such time, mention the existence of another and separate claim which he held against the assignor without any mention of the one asserted by him subsequently as an offset.[27]

Where the debtor remains silent when he is under a duty to speak, such silence may estop him to set off against the assignee claims held against the assignor.[28] The debtor is not estopped to set off, against an assignee, demands against the assignor, merely by reason of the fact that, in a previous suit wherein the debtor was defendant and the assignor plaintiff, he failed or omitted to claim such demands as set-offs against the assignor;[29] and, where the debtor has given two notes in the same transaction, one of which was transferred before and the other after maturity, the debtor is not estopped to set off, in an action by the transferee of the latter note, demands held against the assignor, merely because he has voluntarily paid to a holder in due course the amount of the former note, without asserting the offsets.[30] Where it does not appear that the assignee ever changed its position in reliance on any act or omission of the debtor, the conduct of the latter will not estop it from claiming set-off.[31]

As a party to a compromise is estopped from afterward urging matter constituting a set-off or counterclaim existing at the time of making the compromise, a debtor, compromising a claim with the assignee thereof, has been held to be precluded from counterclaiming against such assignee for demands against the assignor.[32] Where the circumstances are such as to preclude the debtor from set-off of the assignor's debts against the assignee, the latter may be protected, although there was an express agreement of which the assignee was ignorant, between the assignor and the debtor, that the assignor's claim shall be applied in payment of the debtor's claim against him.[33] Mere giving of a note, at a time when there are outstanding debts owed by the payee therein to the maker of the note, is not such conduct as will estop defendant from setting off against an assignee from the payee the debts outstanding against the payee.[34] There is authority to the effect that the execution of a mortgage, by the debtor as mortgagor, to the assignee as mortgagee, after the assignment as collateral security for the assigned debt does not estop the mortgagor to assert in set-off against the mortgagee demands against the assignor of the debt thus later secured.[35]

Estoppel against estoppel The circumstances may be such as to estop the assignee of a claim to assert an estoppel against the debtor to set off demands due from the assignor to the debtor,[36] and under the rules generally applicable to an estoppel against an estoppel, the effect of such an estoppel against the assignee is to open up the supposed estoppel of the debtor and place the merits of the controversy on the real facts of the case.[37]

§ 55. Assigned Claim as Set-Off or Counterclaim

a. In general
b. Nature and validity of assignment
c. Equitable set-off of assigned claim
d. Demands acquired after commencement of action

a. In General

A claim against the plaintiff which is assigned to the defendant before the commencement of the action may be available as a set-off or counterclaim against the plaintiff.

A claim against plaintiff which is assigned to defendant before the commencement of the action may be set off against plaintiff's cause of action,[38] as fully as though the action were between the original parties,[39] in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary,[40] at least if defendant could bring an action thereon in his own name,[41] and, according to some authority, only then,[42] although elsewhere such a claim has been held available if defendant could bring an action on the obligation for his own use in the name of the assignor.[43] Similarly, such an assigned demand may be available to defendant as a counterclaim[44] or in compensation.[45] Thus, a debtor has a right to purchase a cross demand to extinguish a claim against himself by set-off.[46]

The claim of a third person not assigned to defendant is not ordinarily available as a set-off.[47] Thus, the mere holder of an obligation from plaintiff, not assigned to him, has been held not to be entitled to set off such an obligation against a debt which he owes plaintiff,[48] and it has been held that the holder of a claim to whom it has not been assigned cannot use it as an equitable set-off without making the obligee a party.[49] However, it has been held that, in an action against an ancillary administrator, a claim against plaintiff held by the principal administrator is available as a set-off, even though the claim has not been assigned to the ancillary administrator.[50]

Assignment of unliquidated claim. There is authority to the effect that the assignee of an unliquidated claim cannot set it off[51] or counterclaim on it,[52] but there is other authority permitting a counterclaim on an unliquidated assigned demand.[53]

Plaintiff's lack of knowledge. The availability of the assigned claim as an offset has been sustained, although plaintiff debtor in such claim was not aware at the time he acquired the demand against defendant that defendant held the claim.[54]

Effect of defenses to assigned claim. The right to use an assigned claim for purposes of offset may be destroyed, where there are defenses to such claim which operate in part or in whole to prevent or to destroy its existence and enforceability as an obligation against plaintiff.[55] Thus, where defendant produces an assigned note of plaintiff as a set-off, plaintiff may show a total or partial failure of consideration for which the note was given,[56] at least where defendant knew of such failure of consideration at the time of the transfer;[57] or he may show extinguishment of his debt by part[58] or full[59] payment of the assigned claim offered in set-off. Similarly, assigned demands barred by the statute of limitations cannot be set off.[60]

b. Nature and Validity of Assignment

The rules governing the validity and sufficiency of assignments generally apply to the assignment of claims urged as offsets by an assignee, and, where an attempted assignment of a claim is invalid, the assignee cannot assert the claim as a set-off or counterclaim.

The rules governing the sufficiency and validity of assignments generally apply to the assignment of claims urged as offsets by an assignee, and, where an attemted assignment of a chose in action is invalid and inoperative to transfer the subject matter to the assignee, he cannot set off or counterclaim the chose in action.[61] In order to determine whether an assignment is of such a kind as to render the assigned claim available as an offset, the substance of the whole contract must be examined to ascertain its legal effect.[62] An assignment of a principal's demand by an agent without authority, it has been held, is not operative to permit the assignee to use the assigned demand as an offset,[63] and an assigned claim cannot be used in set-off, where the assignee is a corporation not authorized by its charter to enter into such a contract of assignment.[64] An attempted assignment of a demand owned by a partnership executed by a partner in his own name individually and not in the name of the firm does not pass any interest to the assignee so as to make the demand available as a set-off in his favor.[65]

Informal character of assignment. There is authority holding that an assignment sufficient to convey to defendant the interest in the demand sought to be set off is sufficient to allow him to use it as an offset, although the assignment was not made in compliance with the formal requirements established by statute for a full assignment entitling the assignee to sue in his own name,[66] and that a formal assignment is not requisite to the use of the assigned claim as an offset.[67] Thus, delivery without written assignment has been held a sufficient assignment to render a claim available as a set-off.[68]

Incomplete assignment. A claim incompletely assigned is not available as a set-off.[69] A claim assigned to defendant, conditioned on the existence of difficulty between plaintiff and defendant with respect to the subject matter of plaintiff's claim, and not to be operative unless there should be such difficulty, is not so assigned as to be a valid set-off.[70] A claim agreed to be, but not actually, assigned to defendants before the commencement of plaintiff's action cannot be availed of as a counterclaim,[71] although such claim is assigned after the commencement of the suit in accordance with the prior agreement.[72]

Necessity of beneficial interest in assignee. The rule that the party who pleads a set-off must be the real party in interest in the matter of such set-off applies to cross demands by assignees.[73] It is sufficient, as regards defendant's interest in the claim, to justify the use of an assigned claim as a set-off if it is actually and not merely colorably owned by defendant;[74] but a demand assigned conditionally for the purpose of being used by the assignee as a set-off, with an agreement that it be returned if not so used, cannot be used as a set-off or counterclaim to a valid claim against the assignee.[75] This rule is not altered by the fact that, after the original assignment but before the commencement of suit, the assignee has paid the amount of the claim assigned and has taken back a bond from the assignor conditioned for the defense of any suit on the assignee's debt by the assignor and for the payment of any judgment and costs by the latter in the event that such suit should result adversely to the assignee,[76] or by the fact that a judgment on such a claim has been obtained, by the assignee, after the assignment.[77] In like manner, if the demand has merely been borrowed for the purpose of set-off, it will not be allowed.[78] Moreover, defendant cannot set off a claim assigned to him for the sole purpose of enabling him to collect it for the assignor.[79] However, where a claim has been assigned absolutely, although in part for the benefit of a third person, the assignee may, at least to the extent to which he is beneficially interested in the claim, set it off against his demand held by plaintiff;[80] such an assignment is not subject to the objection that there has been a division of the claim and a partial assignment only to defendant.[81]

Necessity for and sufficiency of consideration. According to some authority, it is not essential that there should be any consideration passed for the assignment of a claim in order that the assignment may be valid and operative for the purpose of allowing a set-off of the claim by the assignee,[82] and the assignor has the right to give the claim to the assignee if he chooses,[83] or to sell it for an inadequate consideration,[84] the consideration paid is immaterial,[85] and plaintiff cannot inquire into it or question it.[86] However, it has elsewhere been held that an assigned claim is not available to defendant as an offset to his claim in the hands of a plaintiff, to whom it has been assigned, unless defendant paid value for the claim assigned to him before notice of the assignment of the claim owed by him to plaintiff,[87] and that in such a situation defendant cannot set off a claim purchased for a mere nominal consideration.[88]

A demand assigned to defendant before the commencement of the suit may be set off, although defendant has not paid for it, but only agreed to pay.[89] A creditor's note may be set off by his debtor, although the latter obtained possession thereof at a discount[90] and with a view to the set-off after he became indebted to the creditor.[91] Defendant purchasing claims to be used as set-off may set off the full amount of the claims and not merely the amount actually paid therefor,[92] and a debtor may purchase debts due from his creditor to others at a greater discount than legal interest, and demand a set-off of the full amount with legal interest.[93] A precedent obligation for services rendered by the assignee to the assignor prior to assignment has been held sufficient to sustain the assignment and permit the set-off [94]

Partial assignment. It has been held that, where only part of a demand is assigned, such part is not available as a set-off,[95] but there is authority to the contrary.[96]

c. Equitable Set-Off of Assigned Claim

In equity, as at law, a claim against plaintiff purchased by the defendant before suit may be set off against the plaintiff's cause of action.

In equity, as at law, a claim against plaintiff purchased by defendant before suit may be set off against plaintiff's cause of action,[97] or may serve as the ground of an equitable reconvention.[98] Where an assigned demand is asserted as an equitable offset, it has been held to be an available defense to plaintiff that the assigned claim so offered is barred by the statute of limitations [99] The doctrine discussed supra § 5 that the insolvency of the party against whom the set-off is claimed may be sufficient ground for the allowance of a set-off in equity does not apply as to claims acquired by defendant by assignment unless they were acquired without knowledge of plaintiff's insolvency.[1]

An unliquidated claim assigned to defendant is, it seems, in equity, as in law, unavailable as an offset [2]

Nature and validity of assignment. There is some authority to the effect that an assignment made without consideration therefor is not such a transfer as enables the assignee to set off the claim assigned in equity,[3] but there is other authority to the contrary, wherein it is held that the consideration of the assignment is immaterial in this connection [4] A claim conditionally assigned to defendant expressly for use as a set-off and to be returned if it is unavailable for that purpose is not assigned in such a way that it can be used as a valid equitable set-off;[5] and this has been held to be true even where a different rule prevails at law.[6]

d. Demands Acquired after Commencement of Action

As a general rule, demands against the plaintiff acquired by the defendant after the commencement of the action cannot be interposed as set-offs or counterclaims.

Since the defense of set-off is regarded in the nature of a cross action, it is very generally held that a set-off can be made only of a demand existing and owned by defendant at the time of commencement of the action in which the set-off is sought to be interposed,[7] and claims acquired by defendant

Judgment obtained after commencement of action

against plaintiff after commencement of the action cannot be interposed in an action by defendant as a set-off[8] or counterclaim,[9] at least where the counter demand is not one arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or one connected with the subject of plaintiff's action,[10] or by way of compensation.[11]

Equitable set-off. It has been held that assignment of a claim to defendant after suit commenced does not empower him to use such claim as an equitable set-off,[12] at least in the absence of some such further circumstance as fraud on which a special equity against plaintiff may be based,[13] but there is authority to the contrary,[14] wherein the rule has been announced that if, on trial, it should appear that there are any equitable reasons why a set-off should be allowed of a debt acquired after the action was brought, the court of equity has jurisdiction to direct it to be done.[15] At any rate, the fact that plaintiff is insolvent and the demand against him purchased with full knowledge of the insolvency does not of itself afford equitable ground for moving the court to allow such demand as an offset.[16]

Presumptions and burden of proof. Where defendant uses a note payable to a third person or bearer, as a set-off the time of transfer to defendant not appearing, there is some authority holding that there is a presumption that the negotiation and transfer were at the time the instrument is dated, and, hence, if the date of the instrument is before the commencement of the action, that the transfer is prior to suit, rendering such note available as a set-off,[17] but there is other authority holding that, in order that the assigned claim be a valid offset, the assignee must prove the assignment to have been prior to the commencement of the action.[18]

§ 56. Availability of Assigned Claim as against Assigned Cause of Action

An assigned claim against the plaintiff's assignor may be available as a set-off or counterclaim against the assigned cause of action.

In an action on an assigned demand, defendant may set off or counterclaim a claim against plaintiff's assignor assigned to defendant before the assignment to plaintiff,[19] such a result being held to be clearly within the terms of the set-off statutes,[20] provided, of course, the claim is one which, under the general rules heretofore discussed §§ 12-53, ordinarily is available as a set-off or counterclaim.[21] Where the circumstances are otherwise sufficient to permit such relief, such an assigned demand is available to defendant as an equitable set-off against a plaintiff assignee.[22] Defendant, in an action by an assignee, cannot counterclaim a demand against the assignor in favor of a third person and not assigned to defendant [23]

Effect of insolvency. Where the creditor is insolvent, defendant cannot set off, in a subsequent action by the creditor's assignee, a claim purchased by him against the creditor subsequent to the insolvency and after he has reasonable cause to believe that the creditor is insolvent,[24] and this is true in the absence of any statute on the subject.[25] There is authority, however, permitting such set-off where the assigned cross demand was acquired after insolvency but before notice thereof by defendant as a bona fide purchaser,[26] and it has been held that, even having notice of the insolvency, defendant may be allowed as a set-off the amount of the consideration actually paid for the assigned claim.[27]

Assignee of debtor. Where the owner of property, which constituted security for a personal obligation, assigned the property, subject to the outstanding rights of his creditor, to a third person who, prior to such assignment or to the assignment of the obligation by the creditor, held a demand against such creditor, it was held that the holder of such demand, when sued by the creditor's assignee, was entitled to set off the demand held by him at the time he acquired his interest in the property.[28]

Claim acquired after assignment to plaintiff. Where defendant takes an assignment of a claim against plaintiff's assignor after the assignment to plaintiff[29] or after notice thereof,[30] he cannot set it off against plaintiff's claim, although defendant, while having notice of the assignment, did not have notice of the identity of the assignee,[31] and such set-off will not be allowed if defendant had knowledge of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry or abstained from inquiry for the purpose of avoiding notice [32] The same rule respecting the effect of notice of assignment prior to the purchase of claims against the assignor in rendering the purchased claims unavailable in an action by the assignee has been held to apply to counterclaim,[33] equitable set-off,[34] compensation,[35] and reconvention [36] There is authority permitting defendant, in an action on an assigned demand, to set off[37] or counterclaim for[38] a claim against plaintiff's assignor, although it was assigned to defendant after the assignment to plaintiff, if it was so assigned prior to any notice to defendant of such assignment to plaintiff, at least where it does not appear that plaintiff paid value for the assignment to him.[39] It has been intimated that after notice of assignment an obligor may purchase claims against the assignee and use them by way of set-off to suit brought by the assignee on the obligation assigned.[40]

Effect of prior agreement to assign. Defendant cannot set off an assigned demand against plaintiff's assignor in a suit by plaintiff on an assigned claim against defendant, where the assignment of such demand occurred after notice of the assignment of the claim in suit, although prior to such notice an executory agreement for the assignment of the demand was entered into between defendant and the then holder, where such agreement was not executed or such assignment actually made until after notice.[41]

Express agreement permitting set-off. The unavailability as a set-off against the assignee of a debt of a claim assigned to the debtor after notice of the assignment of his debt by the creditor is not altered by the fact that the creditor has expressly agreed at the time the debt was incurred that the debtor might purchase claims against him and use them in set-off against the debt,[42] even though such

III. OPERATION AND EFFECT

§ 58. Compensation between Cross Demands in General

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the general rule in common-law jurisdictions is that a mutual indebtedness does not work an extinguishment of the respective debts without an application of them by the parties.

In a sense, where the parties have cross demands against each other, the real debt is the excess of one debt over the other[47] and this view is embodied in the civil-law doctrine of compensation under which mutual debts extinguish each other by the mere operation of law, as discussed supra § 9. The common law does not recognize the principle of compensation and extinguishment of debts by the mere operation of law[48] and, as a general rule, mutual indebtedness does not work an extinguishment of the respective debts, without an application of them to each other by the concurrent acts of the parties[49] However, there is authority, sometimes based on statute, that mutual demands compensate and extinguish each other by operation of law[50] A claim not pleaded will not be considered as a set-off or counterclaim[51]

Plaintiff is not entitled to recover where defendant who has set up a cross demand by set-off,[52] recoupment,[53] or counterclaim[54] establishes a demand equal to, or greater than, plaintiff's claim, and this principle will be applied in courts of equity when conditions require it in order to do equity between the parties.[55] Where a cross demand, established under a plea of set-off,[56] recoupment,[57] counterclaim,[58] reconvention,[59] or compensation[60]

is less than plaintiff's demand, he is entitled to recover the difference, but no more.[61] Where the court has found that a set-off is valid in the full amount claimed, it must apply the whole thereof to the extinguishment of the judgment to be offset and it is error arbitrarily to deduct less than the full amount found due on the set-off.[62] It is also erroneous to render judgment for the full amount of plaintiff's demand without deducting the amount set up by defendant's counterclaim which plaintiff admitted defendant was entitled to recover.[63] However, the amount which may be offset or recouped in reduction of plaintiff's demand is limited to the amount demanded in the plea of recoupment or counterclaim,[64] and this is so although the evidence shows that defendant is entitled to an amount greater than was claimed by his plea [65] In the case of an action and counterclaim for tort arising out of the same transaction, there can be no balancing of fault or offsetting of damage done by one against damage done by the other.[66]

Supplemental petition. Reconvention may be pleaded in a supplemental petition, where defendant has set up a reconventional demand superior in amount to the sum claimed in the petition [67]

Judgment. Where a set-off or counterclaim is pleaded, it becomes part of a single controversy between the parties and only one judgment is required.[68] If there is any evidence in support of a counterclaim, rendition of judgment for plaintiff without passing on it is erroneous and ground for reversal.[69] However, a failure to decide specifically on a counterclaim, where it is practically decided, is not error.[70] Where defendant establishes a counterclaim to an amount equal to, or greater than, plaintiff's demand, the judgment must be in favor of defendant,[71] and if defendant establishes a counterclaim for an amount less than plaintiff's demand, although there may be a finding for each party, only one judgment is proper, a judgment for plaintiff for the difference between the amounts of the findings [72] Where plaintiff is in default in an action in which a counterclaim is filed, a judgment for defendant on the counterclaim is proper regardless of the propriety of the action of the court in rendering a judgment on the merits of plaintiff's cause of action.[73]

Interest. It has been held that defendant's non-interest-bearing claim should be set off against plaintiff's interest-bearing claim as of the date such claim became due and owing,[74] and that interest should be awarded only on the net difference between the principals of the claims allowed,[75] but it has also been held that where plaintiff sues on a demand bearing interest, and defendant pleads a discount not drawing interest, plaintiff is entitled to calculate interest on his whole demand up to the time of the verdict,[76] and that, where plaintiff's demand does not bear interest, and defendant pleads a demand drawing interest, the jury must give interest on the set-off to the time the verdict is rendered in the action, and reduce plaintiff's demand by the amount of the set-off and such interest.[77]

When defendant owes plaintiff a much larger amount in damages than plaintiff owes defendant at the time the damages accrued, defendant is not entitled to interest on the amount owed by plaintiff [78] If defendant's cross demand is for unliquidated damages, he can only use the amount of such claim as a set-off, without interest, no interest being allowable on unliquidated damages,[79] and one indebted on a liquidated demand who claims an unliqui-

dated set-off amounting to much less than the debt is liable for interest on the amount which he admits to be due [80] It has been held that an offset should not be allowed a greater rate of interest than the principal against which it is set off.[81]

§ 59. Election of Defendant to Interpose Cross Demand or Bring Independent Action

The failure to urge a claim by way of set-off may constitute laches where it is coupled with delay in asserting the claim

The question whether defendant having a claim against plaintiff must urge it by way of set-off, recoupment, or counterclaim or may instead maintain an independent action thereon is in substance the same as whether a judgment is a bar as to set-offs and counterclaims not interposed in the action and is discussed in the title Judgments § 684 In any event, the failure to urge a claim by way of set-off may constitute laches where it is coupled with delay in asserting the claim.[82] Where defendant has used his claim as a set-off, it is satisfied to the extent that it was so used.[83] Where a debtor has a set-off equally applicable to two defendants against him, it is not for him to elect which of the demands he will satisfy by his set-off, but the court will direct the application according to the equities between the parties [84]

§ 60. Admission of Plaintiff's Cause of Action

a. Recoupment
b. Set-off
c. Counterclaim
d. Compensation and reconvention

a. Recoupment

The authorities are not in accord with respect to the question whether a plea of recoupment admits the plaintiff's cause of action.

In some jurisdictions it has been held that a plea of recoupment admits plaintiff's cause of action[85] and alleges a cause of action in defendant's behalf growing out of a breach of some other part of the contract on which the action is founded, or for some other cause connected with the contract,[86] and that defendant cannot deny plaintiff's cause of action and at the same time claim a recoupment arising out of the same transaction on which plaintiff's cause of action is based.[87] In other jurisdictions it has been held that a plea of recoupment does not confess plaintiff's cause of action[88] but asserts that plaintiff has no demand, or right to demand the amount claimed;[89] and this rule, in a jurisdiction where it obtains, has been affirmed by express statutory provision.[90] It has also been held that while a plea of recoupment alone is equivalent to an admission of plaintiff's claim, a plea of nonassumpsit accompanied by a plea of recoupment, or a notice of recoupment, will not have that effect [91] Under the construction put on some statutes and rules of court, where defendant admits part of the indebtedness under a contract sued on by plaintiff and claims the right to recoup as to the other part, the court has power to render judgment for the amount so admitted and submit the issue as to the balance to the jury.[92]

b. Set-Off

A plea of set-off ordinarily admits the plaintiff's cause of action, but in some jurisdictions the defendant may plead a general denial in addition to the set-off and thereby deny the plaintiff's claim.

As a general rule a plea of set-off is considered as one of confession and avoidance,[93] and it admits plaintiff's cause of action[94] in the absence of a statute providing to the contrary;[95] and this is especially true where the wording of the plea is such that an admission is necessarily implied.[96] It has been held that, if defendant fails to establish his set-off, judgment should be rendered against him for plaintiff's demand,[97] but in some jurisdictions defendant may plead a general denial or another defense in addition to the set-off and thereby deny plaintiff's claim,[98] and judgment for defendant is not dependent on his establishment of set-off.[99]

While it has been held that the pleading of a counterclaim does not admit the plaintiff's cause of action, there is also authority to the contrary.

It has been variously held, sometimes under express statutory provisions, that the pleading of a counterclaim does not admit plaintiff's cause of action,[1] that a counterclaim may be set up without conceding the existence of a cause of action,[2] or that defendant's counterclaim jointly with his codefendant for offsets to plaintiff's account, in an action for goods sold, did not create an estoppel or constitute an admission of his liability on plaintiff's cause of action against the codefendant, where in his answer, separately from counterclaim, he denied the allegations of the complaint relating to such account.[3] Under a statute providing that the answer shall contain, first, a general or specific denial of each allegation of the petition controverted by defendant, and second, a statement of any new matter constituting a defense, counterclaim, or set-off, defendant need not admit the truth of facts alleged in plaintiff's petition as a condition precedent to his maintaining a counterclaim.[4]

The wording of a counterclaim may be such that it cannot be otherwise construed than as an admission of the cause of action set out in the complaint;[5] and some decisions hold without qualification that a cause of action set up in the complaint is admitted by the pleading of a counterclaim in the answer, although there was no specific admission of the indebtedness pleaded by plaintiff.[6]

d. Compensation and Reconvention

It is of the essence of the civil-law plea in compensation that it admits the debt sued on.

It is the essence of the civil-law plea in compensation that it admits the debt sued on.[7] However, one pleading compensation may admit only part of his opponent's claim and set up a reconventional demand against such portion,[8] but if this is not done, and a plea of compensation is made, generally this admits the correctness of the demand sued on.[9]

Reconvention for damages for nondelivery of goods shipped by a consignee, when sued for freight, admits his ownership and authorizes personal judgment against him, under a prayer for general relief, on a claim to be satisfied out of the goods.[10] Where defendant admitted the contract sued on and asked judgment in reconvention for the amount paid thereunder and damages for plaintiff's nonperformance without pleading that the contract was a nudum pactum, such question dropped out of the case, although defendant attempted to reserve its rights under an overruled exception.[11]

§ 61. Right to Judgment for Excess over Plaintiff's Cause of Action

a. Recoupment
b. Set-off
c. Counterclaim
d. Compensation or reconvention
e. Actions by or against assignee or fiduciary

a. Recoupment

As a general rule, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, matter availed of by way of recoupment cannot be made the ground for an affirmative judgment for damages in the defendant's favor, but this rule has been changed by statute in many jurisdictions.

While the contrary view has been taken,[12] it is generally held that, in the absence of a statute

In an early case it was held that providing otherwise, matter availed of by way of recoupment only goes in reduction or extinguishment of damages and cannot be made the ground for an affirmative judgment for damages in defendant's favor.[13] The common-law doctrine above stated has been changed by statute in many jurisdictions, and a defendant who successfully sustains a plea of recoupment is entitled to judgment for any excess of his claim over plaintiff's demand,[14] subject, of course, to the obvious limitation that he cannot recover an amount larger than claimed in his plea.[15] A party who has a defense by way of recoupment will not be permitted to seek affirmative relief by making another person in interest a party defendant, by way of subrogation.[16]

b. Set-Off

In the absence of statute so providing, a defendant who has pleaded set-off is not entitled to recover the excess of his claim over the plaintiff's demand, but under the statutes of many jurisdictions the defendant is entitled to do so.

In the absence of statute expressly or by necessary implication so providing, a defendant who has pleaded set-off is not entitled to recover the excess of his claim over plaintiff's demand,[17] but under the statutes of many jurisdictions on establishing a set-off defendant is entitled to do so,[18] although a recovery in excess of the amount alleged by the plea to be due is, of course, unwarranted.[19] Where defendant pleads a set-off, plaintiff cannot, by refusing to proceed with the case, defeat defendant's right to recover under his set-off.[20] According to some decisions, there can be no judgment on the set-off unless some portion of plaintiff's demand is allowed,[21] but other authorities hold that where plaintiff fails to show a right of recovery on his alleged cause of action, defendant, if he establishes the set-off, as pleaded, is entitled to judgment for the full amount of his claim.[22] A certificate of the balance in favor of defendant pleading a set-off can only be had where the verdict is for defendant.[23] A set-off against plaintiff's action to authorize a balance in favor of defendant must be of a matter mutually subsisting between the parties,[24] and it has been held that a debt to one of several defendants, although a good defense to the action, does not authorize a judgment in favor of defendant against plaintiff for the excess.[25] Where an infant misrepresented his age at the time of purchasing goods under a conditional sale contract, it was held that the seller, in an action by the infant after attaining his majority to recover amounts paid, was entitled to set off a claim for damage to the goods only to the extent of the infant's claim.[26]

c. Counterclaim

It is generally held that, where the defendant pleads and proves a counterclaim which exceeds the plaintiff's demand, the defendant is entitled to a judgment for the excess.

There is authority that a defendant who sets up a counterclaim is not entitled to an affirmative judgment for the excess of his counterclaim over defendant could not recoup his whole damages and, after applying them in the first place to plaintiff's demand, then recover an excess by way of set-off.—Ellsworth v. Brown, 55 N H. 396.

plaintiff's demand,[27] but it is generally held, sometimes by reason of statute, that, where defendant pleads and proves a counterclaim which exceeds plaintiff's demand, defendant is entitled to a judgment for the excess.[28] A counterclaim, when admitted, will not entitle defendant to a judgment for the full amount thereof, unless plaintiff fails to establish his cause of action,[29] and it has been held that he can only recover the excess over plaintiff's recovery where plaintiff succeeds as to some part of his claim[30] and that a dismissal of plaintiff's cause of action carries with it defendant's counterclaim;[31] but there is also authority to the effect that where plaintiff fails to show a right of recovery, defendant is entitled to judgment for the full amount of his counterclaim if established by the evidence,[32] and that plaintiff cannot by dismissal defeat defendant's right to recover on his counterclaim.[33]

Where defendant has admitted plaintiff's claim, a judgment awarding defendant the whole amount of his counterclaim, without deducting plaintiff's claim therefrom, is erroneous[34] and in any event defendant is not entitled to a judgment for a sum larger than that claimed[35] or in excess of the highest sum warranted by the evidence,[36] or for a larger sum than he could have recovered if he had brought a separate action on the demand availed of as a counterclaim.[37] Where defendant is sued for failure to pay the balance of the contract price for work and labor performed by defendant and counterclaims for insufficiency in the work, he is entitled to judgment only for the cost of making good the sufficiency, less such unpaid balance.[38] It has been held that defendant cannot recover by way of a counterclaim against a person not a plaintiff.[39]

In action on a joint and several demand, a counterclaim by one defendant inures to the benefit of all defendants with respect to a recovery by plaintiff against them[40] and with respect to the one pleading it for an affirmative recovery for any surplus.[41]

Cause of action barred by statute. Under statutes providing that, in an action on contract, any other cause of action on contract, although barred by the statute of limitations, may be interposed as a counterclaim, the counterclaim may be availed of as a defense only, and no judgment can be recovered for the excess over plaintiff's demand.[42]

d. Compensation or Reconvention

The defendant may recover an affirmative judgment on a plea in compensation or reconvention.

Where a plea in compensation or reconvention is sustained by the evidence and the amount exceeds that of plaintiff's claim, judgment will be given against plaintiff for the excess,[43] and it has been held that where a plea in reconvention is sustained by the evidence the debt set up by the plea will be allowed even if plaintiff does not establish his claim.[44] It has been held, however, that where plaintiff takes a nonsuit defendant's reconvention will be disregarded, if he be left as he was before the suit.[45] Where a plea in reconvention admits plaintiff's title to the property sued for but claims damages for a breach of contract, and defendant has recovered damages under his plea, it is error for the court to enter judgment denying plaintiff the recovery of the property [46]

e. Actions by or against Assignee or Fiduciary

In an action by an assignee, the defendant cannot recover an affirmative judgment against the assignee on a claim against the assignor.

It is well settled that in an action by an assignee, a claim in favor of defendant against the assignor can be allowed as a set-off,[47] counterclaim,[48] or reconvention[49] only to the extent of the claim sued on, and judgment cannot be rendered against the assignee for the excess. Defendant is entitled to use his claim defensively, and not offensively,[50] and especially is this so where a statute expressly so provides [51] However, the assignment of plaintiff's claim, after the commencement of the action and before trial, will not prevent defendant from entering judgment on a verdict for a balance in his favor, where payment and a set-off were pleaded and the trial was between the original parties to the record.[52]

Fiduciaries Where suit is brought by one suing in a fiduciary capacity, a counterclaim can be allowed against him only to the extent of the claim sued on,[53] and, conversely, on a reference of a disputed claim against a decedent's estate, there is no power, either in the referee or the court, to render an affirmative judgment against claimant on a counterclaim in favor of the executors;[54] they can avail themselves of the counterclaim only to the extent necessary to extinguish claimant's demand.[55]

§ 62. Abandonment or Withdrawal of Cross Demand

As a general rule, unless provided otherwise by statute, a defendant may withdraw a set-off or counterclaim before final submission of the cause.

Unless provided otherwise by statute,[56] a defendant who has filed a plea of set-off has the right to withdraw it before proceeding to trial,[57] or at any time before final submission of the case,[58] or before adjustment of the claim [59] A set-off, it is said, may be withdrawn in analogy to suffering a nonsuit,[60] but, like a nonsuit, the withdrawal of it ought to be explicit [61] Where a set-off has been withdrawn, it is in the discretion of the court to allow or refuse a reinstatement thereof,[62] and a reinstatement at a subsequent term when the opposite party might not be prepared to meet the claim is properly refused [63] A defendant who appears and files an answer of set-off and abandons his defense, and does not appear at the trial until he is defaulted, waives his right with respect to the set-off in that action.[64] Whether or not defendant is barred from suing on a demand which was the subject of a withdrawn set-off is discussed in Judgments § 684.

Counterclaim. While it has been held that defendant may abandon or withdraw his counterclaim[65] at any time before final submission,[66] it has also been held that a defendant cannot do so and thus keep back a portion of the matter in litigation from adjudication,[67] and that a defendant, pleading a counterclaim arising out of the contract constituting the basis of plaintiff's action, cannot withdraw his counterclaim over plaintiff's objections.[68] Under statutes requiring counterclaim to be set up on pain of defendant's losing his right of action and allowing the dismissal of an action at plaintiff's request provided a counterclaim may not have been presented, the court will not allow the withdrawal of a counterclaim with the reservation of presenting it in a separate action.[69] It has been held that defendant may not withdraw or dismiss his counterclaim after final submission,[70] but it has also been held that refusal to permit defendant to dismiss his counterclaim before judgment where plaintiff had been permitted to dismiss his case without prejudice was error, prejudicial to defendant.[71]

The cause of action set up in a counterclaim is considered abandoned where defendant fails to introduce evidence in support of it,[72] or fails to introduce evidence in support of it and moves for a directed verdict,[73] or files the transcript of the record in the appellate court with motion for appeal where judgment was rendered on verdict for plaintiff after defendant's motion for new trial was overruled.[74]

Where defendant's answer contains only a counterclaim, on withdrawal of the counterclaim, judgment must be rendered for plaintiff for the amount of his claim.[75] Plaintiff is not entitled to the benefit of any admissions contained in an abandoned counterclaim unless it is introduced in evidence.[76]

Reconvention. Defendant has the right to discontinue a reconventional demand at any time prior to judgment unless some acquired right of plaintiff would thereby be impaired.[77]

SETTLE. It has been said that the word "settle" is of equivocal meaning,[1] and that it means different things in different connections,[2] and that the particular sense in which it is used may be explained[3] by the context or the surrounding circumstances.[4]

The word "settle" is commonly used with reference to accounts and claims and demands, that is, the status of affairs between parties,[5] and when the term is used in this connection it may mean either to adjust or determine or it may mean to pay or satisfy,[6] but it may also be used with a double

Similarly stated

(1) "Settle" denotes an adjustment and a payment.—Longview v. Capps, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W. 160, 162

(2) "Settle" is either synonymous with "adjust" or it means "to pay."—People v. Green, 5 Daly (N.Y.) 194, 201.

(3) The word "settle" is sometimes used in the sense of "paying," at other times it is used in the sense of accounting together and striking a balance by computation; at other times it is used in the sense of adjusting matters of controversy about which there has been a difference of opinion and striking a balance by meaning to denote an adjustment of a demand and a payment.[7]

Whether the word "settle" means to adjust or to pay may depend on whether the account, claim, or demand with respect to which the term is used is liquidated or unliquidated.[8] When applied to a liquidated account or demand, the word "settle" means to pay it;[9] but when applied to an unliquidated claim or demand "settle" means its mutual adjustment between the parties and an agreement on the balance.[10]

It has been said that the word "settle" may be explained to mean pay,[11] and that it frequently is used in the sense of paying[12] or payment,[13] and thus it is defined as meaning to pay;[14] to close by payment, as accounts;[15] and it has been said that to settle a debt means to discharge it.[16] However, the word "settle" does not necessarily or always mean to pay[17] or a payment.[18]

It is recognized that the word "settle" has an established legal meaning,[19] and implies a mutual adjustment of accounts between different parties, and an agreement on the balance,[20] and this is said to be the proper meaning and ordinary acceptation of the term.[21] In this sense the word "settle" is defined as meaning to adjust;[22] to adjust differences,[23] claims,[24] accounts,[25] or matters of controversy.[26]

The word "settle" is further defined as meaning to agree;[27] to come to[28] or reach[29] an agreement; to go into a settlement;[30] to satisfy;[31] to establish,[32] to liquidate;[33] to dispose of,[34] to compound.[35] "Settle" is also defined as meaning to determine;[36] to ascertain;[37] to fix;[38] to arrange,[39]

to free from uncertainty;[40] to regulate;[41] to balance;[42] to compare with another account.[43]

"Settle" is frequently used with somewhat similar shades of meaning in connection with litigation, and signifies that the controversy has been adjusted and brought to an end,[44] and, nothing else appearing, it indicates a determination on the merits.[45]

In a different sense, the word "settle" means to place;[46] to place in a fixed or permanent condition.[47]

As applied to lands, "settle" conveys the idea of permanent inhabitance,[48] and bona fide use and improvement,[49] and means to fix one's place of residence thereon.[50]

As applied to ministers "to settle" is a technical term and means to place the minister in a permanent seat or fix him in a stable course of life as stated in Religious Societies § 39 a.

"Settle" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "dispose" see 27 C.J.S. p 347 note 11, and "fix" see 36 C J.S. p 885 note 67, and it has been compared with, or distinguished from, "adjust" see 2 C.J S. p 51 note 23, and "dispose" see 27 C.J.S. p 348 note 16.

Settled. The term "settled" in its primary sense[51] means placed; fixed; established;[52] agreed.[53] As applied to a debt, and as ordinarily understood, "settled" means paid,[54] discharged;[55] satisfied.[56] The term is also used as descriptive of a section of country that is "planted with inhabitants."[57]

It has been said that the term "settled," when used with relation to pending litigation, has not acquired such a well-defined meaning as would enable the courts to interpret the intent of the parties in making use of the term in connection with the ending of such litigation without the aid of extrinsic evidence.[58]

"Settled" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "determined" see 26 C.J.S. p 1260 note 20, "discharged" see 26 C.J S. p 1330 note 61, "established" see 30 C.J.S. p 1233 note 64, "fixed" see 36 C.J.S. p 886 note 84, and "paid" see 67 C.J.S. p 551 note 37.

SETTLEMENT. The word "settlement" has several different meanings. In one sense the term is variously applied to accounts,[59] claims,[60] controversies,[61] and transactions,[62] and it implies a meeting of the minds of the parties to a transaction or controversy[63] and the mutual adjustment of accounts and an agreement on the balance.[64] In this sense the term is defined as meaning the act or process of adjusting or determining;[65] an adjusting;[66] an

When employed in connection with public contracts and accounts, the word "settlement" has a well-defined meaning,[78] denoting the appropriate administrative determination with respect to the amount due.[79]

In a very general sense the word "settlement" is used to signify the act of conferring anything in a formal and permanent manner; a bestowing or granting under legal sanction.[80] The term is used in conveyancing with a somewhat similar meaning, signifying the limitation of real or personal property or the enjoyment thereof to several persons in succession, prescribing the mode of holding, enjoying, and disposing of it;[81] any disposition of property, real or personal, by any instrument or number of instruments, for the purpose of securing that the property comprised in the settlement shall be enjoyed by persons in succession, and in particular of regulating the enjoyment of the settled property among the persons or classes of persons nominated by the settlor;[82] the conveyance of any estate for the benefit of some person or persons;[83] the conveyance of property or the creation of estates therein to make future provision for one or more beneficiaries,[84] usually of the family of the creator of the settlement, in such manner as to secure to them different interests, or to secure their expectancies in a different manner, from what would be done by a mere conveyance or by the statutes of descent and distribution;[85] the disposition of property for the benefit of some person or persons,[86] usually through the medium of trustees.[87]

Social settlement. As a designation applied to organizations or societies engaged in charitable or philanthropic work, the term has been said to be one of comparatively recent origin[88] and that its precise legal definition is not free from difficulty.[89] While it has been defined as meaning the settled place of abode or residence of a group of persons concerning themselves with the social condition or well-being of the inhabitants of the district where they live,[90] this definition was recognized by the courts as not being sufficiently precise.[91]

"Several" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "divers" see 27 C.J.S. p 506 note 33, "many" see 55 C.J.S. p 707 note 20, "severable" see supra p 127 note 11, "sundry,"[39] and "various."[40]

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "all" see 3 C.J S. p 869 note 74, "exclusive" see 33 C.J.S. p 112 note 32.2, "individual" see 42 C.J.S. p 1366 note 61.3, "joint" see 48 C J.S. p 798 note 3, and "sole."[41]

Joint and several liability for tort is discussed generally in the C.J S title Torts §§ 34–39, also 62 C J. p 1130 note 42–p 1136 note 99; for negligence generally in Negligence § 102; and for the negligent operation of a motor vehicle in Motor Vehicles § 427. Joint, several, and joint and several contracts are treated generally in Contracts §§ 349–355.

SEVERALLY. The term "severally" is defined as meaning individually;[43] independently;[44] respectively;[45] separately;[46] distinctly;[47] apart from others[48] It has been said that the word "severally" directly connotes severalty of interest.[49]

"Severally" has been held synonymous with "respectively" see 77 C.J.S. p 317 note 92.

SEVERALTY. See Estates § 17.

SEVERANCE. The word "severance" is defined generally as meaning the act of severing, dividing, or separating; the state of being severed or separated; the state of being disjoined or separated;[50]

"Sewing" is the present participle of "sew;"[58] it has been compared with "cementing" see 14 C.J.S. p 61 note 1.

SEWAGE or SEWERAGE. Although the words "sewage" and "sewerage" are frequently used interchangeably,[59] there is in fact a distinction between them, the word "sewerage" being usually applied to a system of sewers, and "sewage" to the matter carried off[60]

The term "sewerage" is often used to indicate anything pertaining to sewers,[61] and is commonly employed for systems conveying sewage,[62] and is defined as meaning the systematic removal and disposal of sewage and general surface waters by sewers[63] "Sewerage" is also defined as meaning any substance which contains any of the waste products or excrementitious or other discharges from the bodies of human beings or animals.[64]

The primary meaning of the word "sewage" is that which passes through a sewer,[65] and a secondary meaning is derived from the usual character of the contents of a sewer,[66] and as used in that sense the word signifies the refuse and foul matter, solid or liquid, which is so carried off;[67] excreted, as well as waste, refuse or foul matter, carried off in sewers

The words "sewage" and "sewerage" both have reference to the general drainage of a city or town by means of sewers,[69] and are applied to matter carried away in drains as well as that carried away in sewers,[70] and the terms include all kinds of drainage and water discharge.[71] On the other hand, it has been held that the terms do not apply to surface drainage,[72] even though it includes feculent matter from open privies.[73]

Sewerage systems and the disposal of sewage are matters of particular importance to municipalities and for specific references in this connection see the index to the title Municipal Corporations.

The disposal of sewage may give rise to certain rights and liabilities, and these rights and liabilities are treated in various titles throughout this work. A state may grant, permit, or suffer the deposit of sewage in navigable water as stated in Navigable Waters § 11 b (1), and it has been held that the use of tidal waters for the discharge of sewage is a public use see Navigable Waters § 55. "Sanitary sewer" distinguished called a "drainage sewer."[80] The term "sanitary sewer" signifies a system conveying sewage,[81] that is, waste water and refuse from houses and towns.[82] A "combined sewer" is one which functions both as a storm sewer and a sanitary sewer.[83]

In considering the word "sewer" etymologically, it has been said that it comes from the word "sew," meaning to drain,[84] and that originally it meant an artificial conduit for water drainage, encompassed with banks on both sides to convey surface waters into the sea and thereby preserve the adjacent lands from inundation.[85] Thus the word "sewer" was formerly defined to mean a fresh-water trench, artifically made, encompassed with banks on both sides to carry surface water into the sea;[86] a small current or little river.[87] It seems, accordingly, that the term "sewer" as meaning a storm sewer was in general use earlier than the meaning of sanitary sewer.[88] More recently, however, and probably from the appropriation of the word "sewer" in acts and ordinances to the common conduits for liquid filth, the term is usually associated with such use.[89] In modern usage the word "sewer," at times under special circumstances,[90] may not include a storm sewer,[91] or it may apply only to a drainage sewer,[92] and not include a sanitary sewer.[93] However, in the absence of anything which would indicate a limitation on the meaning of the term,[94] the word "sewer" will be construed as meaning both storm and sanitary sewers[95]

The word "sewer" is defined as meaning an artificial, usually subterranean, conduit to carry off water and certain waste matter, as (a) surface water due to rainfall;[96] (b) household waste, as slops, waste water from sinks, baths, etc., and excreta consisting of urine, or feces; (c) waste water from industrial works;[97] a large underground passage for fluid and feculent matter, the refuse and filth necessarily present in populated centers, by means of which this matter is carried off;[98] a large and generally, though not always, underground passage or conduit for fluid and feculent matter from a house or houses to some other locality, usually the place of discharge;[99] an artificial canal or conduit, usually subterranean, now used to carry waste water and the refuse from houses and towns;[1] a closed or covered waterway for conveying and discharging filth, refuse, and foul matter, liquid or solid;[2] a drain or passage to carry off water and filth underground;[3]

Transition in use

"In the New International Encyclopædia, 2d Ed., Vol. 20, p. 757 (1916), it is stated, 'In most of the larger cities provisions for surface drainage preceded the introduction of sanitary sewers. Convenience gradually led to the use of these surface or storm sewers for the disposal of liquid and then of solid house wastes, the connections for the latter purpose often being surreptitious at first. As public water supplies were introduced and the per capita water consumption greatly increased, the disposal of the water thus brought into the houses often became even more serious a matter than the removal of surface and ground drainage. This led to the construction of sewers on the combined plan.'"—Anselmi v. City of Rock Springs, supra

a ditch;[4] a drain;[5] a subterraneous canal[6] or channel[7] through which water runs off,[8] particularly in cities.[9]

As generally understood in law, the term "sewer" has reference to the underground canal or passage by means of which cities are drained and the filth or refuse liquids are carried to the sea, river, or other places or reception,[10] and ordinarily is applied to drains in the city, whether of water or filth or both;[11] but it has also been applied to an underground structure for conducting the water of a natural stream,[12] and the word "sewer" is sometimes defined as meaning an artificial watercourse for draining marsh land and carrying off surface water into a river or sea.[13]

There is nothing in the nature of a sewer which excludes it from being made, in whole or in part, out of a natural waterway.[14] Usually, but not necessarily, sewers are closed,[15] and generally are covered over to prevent the escape and dissemination of foul odors and noxious gases and to conceal the passage of their contents through the streets.[16]

Sewers are constructed as sanitary measures for the public good;[17] and both storm and sanitary sewers subserve the public health.[18] It has been said that sanitary sewers are much more complicated and costly systems than are drainage sewers.[19]

"Sewer" has been distinguished from "culvert" see 25 C.J.S. p. 25 note 40, "ditch" see 27 C.J.S. p. 505 note 14, and "drain" see Drains § 1.

Sewers are treated in various connections throughout the title Municipal Corporations. The creation of offices or departments dealing with sewers, the term of office, powers, and duties are discussed in §§ 617–625. Tort liability for defects in sewers is treated in §§ 873–894. The power of municipalities to construct and maintain sewers is treated in § 1049, and liability by reason of such construction and maintenance is treated in § 1235. The right to levy special assessments for sewer construction is discussed in § 1318, and the regulation and use of public sewers are treated in §§ 1802–1806. For other specific references consult the title index.

Sewers are also treated in various other connections throughout this work. Condemnation of land for sewer purposes is treated in Eminent Domain § 451 c. The public easement in a highway may include the right to make sewers as stated in Highways § 139. Mandamus for the purpose of compelling duties with respect to sewers is treated in Mandamus § 180 f. The attractive nuisance doctrine has been held inapplicable to sewers and sewer excavations as stated in Negligence §§ 29(12) e, 41. The duty of a railroad to construct sewers is discussed in Railroads § 186 b (2).

For other specific references see Sewage or Sewerage ante; and consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

"Shaft" is defined as meaning a handle or haft; a shaven or smooth rod;[36] a lengthy shafting.[37] More specifically, it means an axle, mandrel, arbor, or other long and usually cylindrical bar, especially if rotating, and subject to torsional stress; as a steamer shaft, a flywheel shaft,[38] a revolving bar to convey the force which is generated by some prime mover to the different working machines[39]

In medical terminology, a "shaft" is defined as an elongated rod-like structure, as the part of a long bone between the epiphyseal extremities.[40]

The word "shaft" has been distinguished from "shafting."[41]

A master's liability for injury to his servant due to defective shafts is discussed in Master and Servant § 221, and "shaft," as a mining term, is defined in Mines and Minerals § 3 h. Consult also the indexes to these titles for references to the word as employed in other connections.

SHAFTING. A revolving shaft connecting the power to machinery;[42] a system of connecting shafts for communicating motion;[43] a system of stout rods or shafts, usually cylindrical, mounted in bearings, and serving to carry pulleys, gear wheels, or the like, for communicating power;[44] the system of shafts which connects machinery with the prime mover, and through which motion is communicated to the former by the latter.[45] The general term "shafting" has been held to include countershafts,[46] pulleys which are necessary attachments of the countershaft,[47] and set screws attaching parts of a machine to the shaft.[48]

The term "shafting" has been distinguished from "shaft" see ante note 41.

SHAKE. The noun "shake" is defined generally as meaning the act or an act of shaking; a series of jolts, jerks, or other quick oscillatory movements, or one of such a series of movements; concussion; agitation; jog, shock.[49]

As applied to timber, a "shake" is an opening of the grain, caused by rapid growth of the tree[50]

As a verb, the word "shake" means to move rapidly and shortly to and fro or up and down.[51]

Shakedown, shake down. As a noun the word "shakedown" means an act or process of shaking down;[52] but in slang the word has a well-defined meaning and signifies an instance or means of depriving one of money by persuasion or compulsion.[53]

The verb "to shake down" means to force (one) to give up money.[54]

SHALE. A rock formed by the consolidation of clay, mud, or silt, having a finely stratified or laminated structure.[55] It presents almost endless varieties of texture and composition, passing, on the one hand, into clays, or, where much indurated, into slates and argillaceous schists; on the other into flagstones and sandstones; or again through calcareous gradations into limestone, or through ferruginous varieties into clay ironstone, and through bituminous kinds into coal.[56]

sometimes referred to as the imperative "shall,"[60] the imperative auxiliary "shall,"[61] the mandatory "shall."[62]

The word "shall" is elastic,[63] and is not of inflexible signification,[64] and it has been said that its various meanings range under two general classes, according as it is used, as implying futurity or implying a mandate.[65] The word is sometimes used as expressive of condition apart from futurity,[66] and it frequently is used in the sense of "may"[67] or "will,"[68] and it may be used in the preterit sense of "must."[69]

"Shall" has been held to be synonymous with "may" see 57 C.J.S. p 459 notes 25, 28, "must" see 64 C.J.S. p 1080 note 40, and "will,"[70] and "shall" has also been distinguished from "will."[71]

Phrases employing the word "shall" are set out in the note.[72]

Expressing Time

Various statements have been made by the courts as to the signification of the word "shall" when used to express the time concept, and it has been stated that in relation to time "shall" does not always express an absolute limitation.[73] It has been said that "shall" sometimes expresses futurity[74] only,[75] and implies no idea of obligation;[76] that "shall" naturally imports futurity,[77] or commonly,[78] or usually,[79] refers to the future,[80] and indicates action to be had in the future;[81] that in common and ordinary usage,[82] unless accompanied by qualifying words which show an intent to the contrary,[83] "shall" always refers to the future. On the other hand, it has been said that "shall" is not always, or perhaps not most frequently, used in the auxiliary future sense.[84] Such statements are not necessarily in conflict since, in early English, "shall" was mainly used in all persons to express simple futurity,[85] but in modern English "shall" primarily denotes obligation, although in the first person it simply denotes future fact, while in the second and third persons the idea of obligation remains, and is felt to be imposed by the person speaking; hence, "you shall" or "they shall" means, "I will compel you or them to act," and, consequently, "you (he or they) shall" expresses command or necessity, never simple future action.[86]

Statements have also been made to the effect that "shall," in some instances, denotes present time,[87] and that it is often used in a general sense to include both past and future,[88] and should be so considered when a more restricted interpretation is not required.[89]

Expressing Mandate, Obligation, Permission or Direction

In general. It is stated in the following subdivisions that the word "shall" always has a mandatory meaning, although at times on sufficient reason it may be construed as having only a permissive or directory meaning, and whether the term, as used in constitutional, contractual, statutory, or testamentary provisions, should be construed to be mandatory or directory depends on the intention, and its construction is controlled by the object sought to be reached or by the subject matter and context.[90]

Compulsory, peremptory, imperative, or mandatory sense. In common,[91] and ordinary[92] usage, "shall" has a compulsory,[93] peremptory,[94] imperative,[95] or mandatory[96] meaning, and it has been

"While authorities hold that when used as indicative of past, present, or future operation, the word 'shall' commonly refers to the future . . . this will be found to be the result of accompanying words or the use of 'shall' in such connection as necessitates such interpretation Other authorities give the word a present or what might be called a retrospective effect"—Ex parte Norton, 21 S. said that it always,[97] or usually,[98] has this meaning, as opposed to a permissive[99] or directory[1] meaning, although, as stated infra p 138 notes 34–38, at times on sufficient reason it may be construed as having only a permissive or directory meaning.

In its ordinary signification,[2] "shall" is a word of command,[3] and is the language of command,[4] and is the ordinary, usual, and natural word used in connection with a mandate.[5] In this sense "shall" is inconsistent with,[6] and excludes,[7] the idea of discretion, and operates to impose a duty which may be enforced,[8] particularly if public policy is in favor of this meaning,[9] or when addressed to public officials,[10] or where a public interest is involved,[11] or where the public or persons have rights which ought to be exercised or enforced,[12] unless an intent to the contrary appears;[13] but the context ought to be very strongly persuasive before it is softened into a mere permission.[14]

When the word "shall" is employed with respect to a right or benefit to any person, and that right or benefit depends on giving the word a mandatory meaning[15] or an imperative construction,[16] the presumption is that the word was used with respect to such right or benefit,[17] and it cannot be given a permissive meaning merely;[18] and when a right to a person or property is lost or destroyed by a failure to do an act within a limited time it is given a mandatory effect;[19] and it ought to be construed as meaning "must,"[20] for the purpose of sustaining or enforcing an existing right,[21] but it need not be so construed for the purpose of creating a new right.[22]

Expressing obligation. Primarily,[23] and usually,[24] "shall" denotes,[25] and is expressive of,[26] obligation, and is commonly a word of imperative obligation.[27] "Shall" imports the imposition of a duty,[28] and implies a duty or necessity whose obligation is derived from the person speaking[29]

As directory or permissive. The word "shall" is frequently used without intending that it be taken literally,[30] so that it is not always imperative[31] or mandatory,[32] but may be consistent with an exercise of discretion.[33] Accordingly at times, on sufficient reason,[34] or where such intent is indicated,[35] or where the subject matter requires,[36] the word may be construed as being merely directory,[37] or as being merely permissive,[38] or as meaning "may,"[39] especially when it is absolutely necessary to prevent irreparable mischief, or to construe a direction so that it shall not interfere with vested rights, or conflict with the proper exercise of power, by either of the fundamental branches of government.[40] The word "shall" will be construed to mean "may," and to be merely directory, when by giving it that construction no advantage is lost,[41] no benefit is sacrificed,[42] either to the public or to any individual,[43] or no right is destroyed,[44] or when no right or benefit to any one depends on its imperative use,[45] or when the provision in which it is found does not confer a private right and the public interest does not demand a mandatory construction.[46]

Should

The word "should" is the imperfect of the word "shall."[47] It is an auxiliary verb,[48] and it is used either as the conditional present[49] or the past[50] tense, that is, the preterit,[51] of the verb "shall."

"Should" has various shades of meaning,[52] and it may be imperative,[53] and employed as a word of obligation,[54] having the force or meaning of "must," or "ought to."[55] In this sense "should" is defined as meaning obliged or compelled (to); would have (to); must; ought (to); used with an infinitive (without to) to express obligation, necessity, or duty in connection with some act yet to be carried out.[56] Thus it has been said that "should" carries,[57] denotes,[58] expresses,[59] or implies[60] the sense of[61] duty[62] or obligation[63] equivalent to compulsion.[64] In this sense it is not merely advisory,[65] and does not carry the idea merely of authority or discretion.[66] However, in its ordinary meaning "should" does not express certainty.[67]

The word "should" may be employed merely as indicating futurity,[68] and it may be merely directory.[69] Thus it has been said that the word "should" may imply merely[70] a moral obligation,[71] or the obligation of fitness,[72] propriety, expediency,[73] and the like.[74]

"Should" is used with frequency in instructions to advise the jury that it is their duty as jurors to find as stated.[75]

"Should" has been held to be equivalent to, or synonymous with, "may" see 57 C.J.S. p 459 notes 26, 29, "might" see 57 C.J.S. p 459 note 50, "ought" see 67 C.J.S. p 534 note 26, and "would."[76]

Cross References

Because of the established general rule that constitutional provisions are to be construed as mandatory unless, by express provision or by necessary implication, a different intention is manifest, the word "shall," as used in constitutional provisions, is usually imperative or mandatory as stated in Constitutional Law § 61.

Statutes and ordinances are more frequently considered to be directory or permissive than are constitutional provisions, and therefore the word "shall," when used in a statute, while generally imperative, may be construed as merely permissive as stated in the C.J.S. title Statutes § 380, also 59 C.J. p 1080 note 95–p 1087 note 27. Similarly, the presumption is that the word "shall" in an ordinance is mandatory, but it may be construed as merely permissive where the spirit and purpose of the ordinance require such a construction, or where such a construction is necessary in order to give effect to the legislative intent as stated in Municipal Corporations § 442 a.

In the construction of contracts the word "shall" is generally regarded as imperative as stated in Contracts § 304.

The use of the words "shall" and "should" in civil cases in instructions to jurors is treated in the C.J.S. title Trial § 327, also 64 C.J. p 637 note 68.

SHAM. As a noun, the word "sham" primarily means that which deceives expectation; any trick or fraudulent device which disappoints; a make-believe, imposition, humbug.[79] The word is also defined as meaning something which is false in fact, although good in form.[80]

As a verb, "sham" means to deceive or delude with false pretenses; to trick; cheat.[81] It has been held synonymous with "assume" see 7 C.J.S. p 105 note 25.

The adjective "sham" is defined as meaning false;[82] counterfeit; pretended;[83] feigned; unreal.[84] It is held to be equivalent to "dummy" see 28 C.J S. p 588 note 87, and "false" see 35 C.J.S. p 496 note 12, and it has been contrasted with "frivolous" see 37 C.J.S. p 1382 note 20.

Sham and frivolous pleadings are discussed generally in Pleading §§ 35, 109, and Equity §§ 196 a, 299, 327, 351, 387.

SHAMEFUL. Deserving shame or disgrace; bringing reproach; disgraceful; scandalous; infamous.[85] It has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "immodest" see 42 C.J.S. p 395 note 42, "indecent" see 42 C.J.S. p 560 note 77, and "infamous" see 43 C.J.S. p 43 note 65.

SHAMELESSNESS. The state or character of being shameless; utter want of shame; lack of sensibility to disgrace or dishonor; impudence.[86]

SHANKING. A term employed in golf which means swinging under the ball or lower than intended so that the ball is hit with the shank or shaft instead of with the face of the club.[87]

SHAPE. The term "shape" is defined generally as meaning the disposition of the external bounding surface of a body or lines of a plane figure; outward form or construction; configuration; contour.[88] The word also has a technical meaning and is applied to certain standard products of structural steel material, such as tees, angle bars, bulbs, etc.[89]

"Structural shape" or "structural shapes." The term imports in general a capacity to sustain heavy weights or to resist great tension, or both,[90] and, in engineering and architecture, is the shape of a member especially adapted to structural purposes, especially in giving the greatest strength with the least material, hence, colloquially, any steel or iron member of such shape, as channel irons, I beams, T beams, etc., or, sometimes, a column, girder, etc., built up with such members.[91]

SHARE. The word "share" ordinarily signifies a part or definite portion of a thing[92] owned by a number of persons in common,[93] and the term is frequently applied to one of the parts into which a sum of money or other divisible thing may be divided.[94]

It has been stated that when the "share" of another in an estate is spoken of the natural thought is of the whole and complete portion or fraction which is to be received,[95] and that when used to mark out an inheritance in an estate the words "the share" do not import that there is something more, outside of and beyond it, to be otherwise and elsewhere pointed out, but they indicate totality.[96]

"Share" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "interest" see 47 C.J.S. p 1 note 16, "part" see 67 C.J.S. p 878 note 38, "portion" see 72 C.J.S. p 230 note 35, and "unit."[97]

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "amount" see 3 C J.S. p 1056 note 81, and "interest" see 47 C.J S. p 2 note 17.

The verb "share" is defined as meaning to partake[98] of[99] or enjoy with others;[1] to have a part or share in;[2] to have a portion of;[3] to participate;[4] and it has been said that to share does not demand necessarily an equal division.[5]

The shares or portions to which beneficiaries are entitled under a will are discussed in the C.J.S. title Wills §§ 697–706, also 69 C.J. p 278 note 19–p 287 note 29. Renting land on shares, see Landlord and Tenant §§ 793–829.

ship,[7] and in this sense defined as meaning having a keen edge or an acute point; capable of cutting or piercing.[8]

In a different sense the term is defined as meaning vigilant; attentive.[9]

SHAVE. The verb "shave" is defined generally as meaning to make bare or smooth by scraping or drawing an edged instrument along the surface; also, to shape or reduce by paring or cutting.[10]

As used with respect to money, the word "shave" commonly means lending it on usury, or making unfair purchases with it; in short, availing one's self of others' wants in order to obtain an advantage and make an unconscientious profit.[11] Thus the word may be defined as meaning to fleece; to oppress by extortion; to pillage; to strip.[12]

The word is also used to denote the buying of existing notes, and other securities for money at a discount, beyond the nominal amount of the debt and interest due or to become due on such notes or securities,[13] and without reference to the question whether any such paper was created for the purpose of being discounted,[14] and in this latter application it has been said to be, at least in one state, a technical term.[15]

SHAVING. That which is shaved off; a thin slice or strip pared off with a shave, a knife, a plane, etc.[16]

SHAWL. A cloth of wool, cotton, silk, or hair, used especially by women as a loose covering for the neck and shoulders;[17] an article of wearing apparel; a wrap which a woman wears when she goes out walking, driving, or traveling.[18] It is distinguished from "rug" see 77 C.J.S. p 544 note 45.

SHAWLING. A term of the glass-working industry, used particularly in the cylinder drawing art, being a practice or system of cutting the cylinder longitudinally, whereunder the cylinders are made large and split into a number of segments before flattening.[19]

SHE. The pronoun of the third person singular feminine.[20]

SHEARS. The word "shears" is defined as meaning any of the various cutting instruments operating by the action of opposed edges of metal;[21] an instrument to cut with, consisting of two blades, usually moving on a pin, between which the thing to be cut is interposed; a kind of large scissors;[22] a machine which cuts by means of a blade or set of blades working against a resisting edge, the material to be sheared being between the two.[23]

In various of the dictionaries are found more specific definitions of "shears" having relation to the purpose which they serve, such as tinman's shears, various kinds of bench shears, bar and metal shears, hydraulic shears, and others.[24]

SHEATHING. In general, any material, such as tin, copper, slate, tiles, etc., prepared for application to a structure, as covering; that which sheathes or covers, or protects, or may be used for that purpose.[25]

SHEEP. A generic term,[32] general and comprehensive,[33] defined as any ruminant of the genus "ovis" especially any of the domesticated varieties.[34] It may include within its meaning the ewe,[35] lamb,[36] ram,[37] and wether,[38] although in the connection in which used the term may include only a wether more than a year old,[39] and not include unweaned lambs.[40]

SHEET. The word "sheet" is defined generally as meaning a broad, usually flat, and relatively thin piece of anything; a large, broad piece of anything comparatively thin, as paper, cloth, etc.[41]

The term is frequently applied to a piece of metal or other substance, hammered, rolled, fused or cut very thin, as a sheet of tin, a sheet of glass, a sheet of veneer;[42] and it is often used in composition to denote that the substance to the name of which it is prefixed is in the form of sheets or thin plates, as sheet-iron, sheet-glass, sheet-tin.[43]

The word "sheet" is also used to denote a broad piece of paper,[44] and, in the printer's art, it is what is used for one impression.[45]

The term is also applied to an article of bed furniture, composed of various substances, as linen, cotton, wool, singly or in combination;[46] and when so used the word has reference to the form and not to the material of which the article is made.[47]

"Sheet" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "disc" see 26 C.J.S. p 1329 note 23, "plate" see 70 C.J.S. p 1104 note 41, and "slab."[48]

Size of article

"Our conception of the meaning of the word 'sheet' of anything, as generally understood, would be, in the first instance, somewhat varied according to the nature, value, and use of the material of which the alleged sheets were composed. For instance, it is very likely that an article might properly be referred to as a sheet of gold which was of less size than a sheet of tin or iron or a sheet of cloth or paper, and we do not undertake to fix the size above which an article, if it otherwise conforms to the definition of a sheet, is such, and below which it is not."—American Express Co. v. Origin

The office of sheriff is one of ancient origin. Its creation goes back to the time of King Alfred of England, and maybe further. The holder of the office has always been the chief executive officer and conservator of the peace in his county—Sweat v. Waldon, 167 So 363, 364, 123 Fla 478

"Sheriff" as generic term. The term "sheriff" used in the statutes frequently is construed as a generic term to include the whole class of officers performing duties usually appertaining to the office of sheriff, such as a deputy sheriff[6] or constable,[7] although under the construction put on some statutes a deputy sheriff is not a sheriff.[8] Similarly "sheriff" may include a coroner.[9]

not the sheriff,[13] but is merely the substitute of the sheriff,[14] although it has been held that the sheriff and his deputies are considered as one and the same officer,[15] and that the deputy is the alter ego of the sheriff.[16] There are two kinds of deputies, a general deputy or undersheriff and a special deputy,[17] and a deputy sheriff may be special in the sense that he is authorized to perform only part of the duties of the sheriff,[18] or in the sense that he is appointed by the sheriff without being assigned to perform any duties of the sheriff but being subject to assignment to duty by the sheriff from time to time as the sheriff in his discretion may determine.[19] The sheriff may be authorized to abolish the office of deputy sheriff,[20] but the county commissioners may not do so.[21]

Generally, a constable is an officer of a municipal corporation, usually elected, whose duties are similar to those of the sheriff, although his powers are less and his jurisdiction smaller. He is to preserve the peace, execute process of magistrates' courts and of some other tribunals, serve writs, attend the sessions of the criminal courts, have the custody of juries, and discharge other functions sometimes assigned to him by the local law or by statute.[22] Constables are local peace officers of their vicinage, the ministerial officers of justices of the peace, and the bailiffs of courts of record of criminal jurisdiction in the county,[23] officers charged with a duty to the public of the gravest and most delicate nature, in which the whole commonwealth is vitally interested,[24] and originally their duty was to keep the peace, and they had no authority to serve process

Distinction

There are two kinds of deputies well known in practice. First, a general deputy or undersheriff, who, by virtue of his appointment, has authority to execute all the ordinary duties of the sheriff, and who executes process without special power from the sheriff, second, a special deputy, who is an officer pro hac vice to execute a particular writ in some certain action, and who acts under a specific, and not a general, appointment of authority.—Borders v. A. SHERIFFS

§ 4. In General

The office of sheriff ordinarily is elective, and it is usually provided that the office be filled by a person chosen by the people of the county.

The office of sheriff ordinarily is elective, and it is usually provided by the constitutions or statutes that the office be filled by a person chosen by the people of the county[29] at an election held under, and governed by, the general rules relating to popular elections.[30]

§ 5. Duty to Serve

Under some early statutes and decisions, it appears that a person elected or appointed sheriff was bound to serve.

Under some early statutes and decisions, it appears that a person elected or appointed sheriff was bound to serve.[31] A statute providing for a penalty on the refusal of a person commissioned to the office of sheriff to accept was not applicable to a person whose name is not in the sheriff's commission although the office was offered him by the county court.[32]

§ 6. Eligibility

Either at common law or by virtue of the constitutions and statutes, certain qualifications are prerequisite for the holding of the office of sheriff.

Either at common law or by virtue of the constitutions and statutes, certain qualifications are prerequisite for the holding of the office of sheriff.[33] Thus provision is made by the constitutions and statutes requiring the sheriff to be a qualified elector,[34] a resident of the county,[35] and possessed of certain property qualifications.[36] Even in the absence of constitutional or statutory provision, citizenship has been considered a prerequisite to the holding of office of sheriff.[37]

Likewise, ordinarily it is provided by the constitution or statutes that the candidate for the office of sheriff be free from certain disqualifications.[38] Thus a person may be disqualified by reason of his liability for public money unaccounted for,[39] or by being an attorney at law,[40] or by a conviction of an infamous crime,[41] or by holding or exercising functions of an office under the government of the United States.[42] A judgment removing a sheriff does not disqualify him from reëlection,[43] and the pendency of a suit against him does not disqualify him as a candidate or affect the validity of his reëlection.[44] The removal of a sheriff does not necessarily render him ineligible to reelection as sheriff during the remainder of his original term,[45] although under statute, where a nomination or election has been annulled or set aside for any offense mentioned in the act, the candidate is ineligible for office during the period fixed by law for the term of office.[46]

Willful default

The eligibility of a person is not established by the fact that he has been elected by the people,[47] or has been issued a certificate of election,[48] or has taken the oath of office and given an official bond as sheriff,[49] or has received a commission as such officer.[50] An election of an unqualified person has been held to be voidable merely and not void.[51]

Previous incumbency of office. In some states the the constitutions provide that the same person shall be ineligible for the office of sheriff for more than a certain number of years within a prescribed larger period of time;[52] but a limitation of this character is on the person and has no such relation to the tenure as to permit the computation, as against a pro tempore incumbent appointed to fill an unexpired term, of the time his predecessor had occupied the office.[53] Constitutional provisions prohibiting the same person from holding the office of sheriff for two successive terms have been held to apply only to full terms,[54] and not to render a person who has served the unexpired portion of a term under an appointment or election to fill a vacancy,[55] or who has been elected sheriff of a newly created county for a statutory term less than the full constitutional term and running until the next general election,[56] ineligible to reelection for the succeeding full term. So also one who has served one term is eligible for election to fill a vacancy occurring during the next ensuing term.[57]

Where a constitutional provision that sheriffs should serve two years and be eligible for only four years in any period of six was amended by increasing the term to four years and making sheriffs ineligible to reëlection, a person who was elected sheriff for a two-year term at the same election at which the amendment was adopted by the voters was eligible for reelection for a four-year term.[58] In at least one jurisdiction a person is ineligible for the office of sheriff for more than two consecutive terms,[59] and this includes holding office for part or all of such terms,[60] and the provision may not be evaded by resigning near the close of a term.[61]

Removal of disqualification. Although a sheriff, at the time of his election, is an alien, and is consequently ineligible to hold office, his naturalization as a citizen before induction to office has been held to remove this disability and entitle him to the office.[62]

a. In General

Where one is elected by the people to the office of sheriff, a commission from the governor is not necessary to authorize him to act unless the issuance of such commission is made a condition precedent to his entering on the duties of the office. Statutes requiring the person elected to qualify within a prescribed time have in some cases been held to be merely directory.

Where one is elected by the people to the office of sheriff, a commission from the governor is not necessary to authorize him to act[63] unless the issuance of such commission is made, by constitution or statute, a prerequisite to his entering on the duties of the office.[64] In at least one jurisdiction, a person elected cannot receive a commission to act until a bond is approved and he otherwise qualifies under the law, but on compliance with such statutory and constitutional provisions he is entitled to his commission.[65] It is not a good objection to the validity of a sheriff's commission that it bears date prior to the expiration of the term of his predecessor where it was not to take effect until after such term expired.[66] If the governor should ascertain that he has, through mistake or otherwise, improperly issued a commission to one person when it ought to have been issued to another, he may correct the error by issuing a commission to the person legally entitled thereto.[67]

Statutes requiring the person elected sheriff to qualify within a prescribed time, failing in which the office shall be deemed vacant,[68] have in some cases been held to be merely directory.[69] The statutory directions as to the time within which a sheriff-elect must qualify are not applicable to a person to whom the election board refuses a certificate,[70] and a statute providing that the office shall be deemed vacant on the neglect or failure to qualify after notice of the election is inapplicable where the sheriff-elect receives no such notice.[71]

Where the statute provides that, when any election is contested, the person elected shall have a certain number of days in which to qualify after the date of the decision, an injunction restraining the person elected from qualifying as sheriff is so much in the nature of a contest that he will be entitled to at least a reasonable time after a decision in his favor in which to qualify.[72] Although a sheriff fails to qualify by giving a bond within the prescribed time, the exercise of the duties of the office may constitute him a de facto sheriff.[73] It is error to permit a person to qualify as sheriff where it does not appear that he has been appointed or elected to the office.[74] Where a claimant of the office of sheriff is acting as such, that circumstance, together with the certificate of election, raises the presumption that he has executed his bond and taken the oath of office.[75]

Oath. Ordinarily, as one of the requisite formalities for the qualification of a sheriff, it is provided by statute that the person chosen shall take an official oath,[76] although when the sheriff himself acts as bailiff to the jury no special oath is required.[77] In administering the oath, a clerk of court acts ministerially under the direction of the law and not of the court, and this may be done as well out of court as in court.[78] Where the sheriff-elect complies with the law as to giving bond, and offers to take the oath of office within the time allowed by statute in which to qualify, the clerk of the court may be compelled by mandamus to administer the oath.[79]

Production of receipts or settlements. Statutes requiring that a sheriff shall periodically during his term, or before being inducted into office for a second or subsequent term, produce receipts or settlements showing that his dealings with public moneys have been faithful and just must be complied with,[80] and they are not unconstitutional as imposing qualifications on the eligibility of such sheriff-elect other than those required by the constitution.[81] Where the statute declares that the board of county commissioners shall elect a suitable person to fill the unexpired term on the failure of the sheriff-elect to qualify by settling his accounts, a successor duly appointed and qualified is entitled to a writ of mandamus to compel the incumbent to surrender the property of the sheriff's office.[82]

Setting aside qualification It has been held that, where the court has permitted one to qualify and give bond as sheriff, it may at the same term set aside such qualification and bond.[83]

Evidence of qualification. Where the record of the court, after reciting the election of a sheriff, states that he appeared in court and took the several oaths prescribed by law, and entered into and acknowledged a bond in a named penalty with certain persons as security, the record is, in the absence of fraud, conclusive that the bond was properly executed by the persons whose names are affixed to it.[84]

b. Bond

The bond or recognizance which a sheriff-elect is required to execute or enter into for the faithful performance of the duties of his office is collateral security for the performance of such duties and operates to protect and give indemnity to all persons who may be damnified by neglect or failure in the performance of such duties

A sheriff-elect is required to execute or enter into a bond or recognizance for the faithful performance of the duties of his office,[85] and such bond or recognizance is collateral security for the performance of his duties[86] and operates to protect and give indemnity to all persons who may be damnified by neglect or failure in the performance of such duties.[87] Statutes requiring bonds, however, have been held not to affect the capacity of the sheriff to execute judicial process without having executed a bond[88] or to sue a receiptor in conversion for personal property delivered on an attachment.[89] It has been held also that the irregularity of inducting a sheriff into office without all the bonds required by law is cured by a subsequent tender and acceptance thereof.[90] In at least one jurisdiction a recognizance is a security or obligation entirely distinct from the bond,[91] having different characteristics and affording separate remedies,[92] although both are to secure the faithful performance and execution of the sheriff's official duties.[93]

Form and sufficiency A failure to comply literally with the form of bond prescribed by statute does not invalidate the bond,[94] since it is sufficient if the conditions of the bond are substantially and in effect the same as those prescribed by the statute,[95] and a bond which has been accepted and approved is not invalidated by the fact that the obligee is not the obligee designated by the statute.[96] In the absence of a clear intent to the contrary, statutory conditions will be read into the bond.[97] A bond, executed in the form and for the sum pre-

Security for enforcement of cause of action
The wrong committed by the sheriff is the substantial and actual foundation of the cause of action against a surety on the bond The sheriff's bond is only collateral security for the enforcement of such cause of action. It does not give the cause of action It is the wrong which gives that, and the bond simply furnishes security to indemnify the person who suffered because of the wrong

scribed by law, is not vitiated by having annexed to the names of some of the sureties words expressing the true liability of the parties.[98] Where, under the statutes, the sureties are jointly and severally liable, it is immaterial whether the bonds are signed by the sureties on the same date or on different dates,[99] or whether the date of each bond was in fact the date on which the bond was signed[1] Where the bonds are signed by personal sureties instead of by a surety company authorized to do business in the state, the clerk may refuse to accept or file the bonds.[2]

Where the statute provides that the sureties shall justify before a designated tribunal or official, if no sufficient sureties are offered or those offered refuse to justify, the sheriff-elect is not entitled to a peremptory mandamus to the designated tribunal to induct him into office.[3] In the absence of a statute requiring a sheriff's official bond to be acknowledged by the signers thereof, such acknowledgment is not necessary to its validity,[4] and, although the law may require the bond to be acknowledged in open court, the omission of this formality does not invalidate the bond[5] Where there is not a local chief judge in each county, a statute requiring a sheriff's recognizance to be taken before the first judge of the county court is complied with by its being taken before the assistant judge of the county whose name appears first in order upon the record of the election.[6]

Amount. The penalty of a sheriff's bond is usually fixed by statute; but a bond in a larger penalty may be required when the exigencies of the case demand it[7] When a sheriff's official bond has been accepted, it is not void because the penalty is less than is required by the statute.[8]

Delivery, approval, filing, and recording Where the statute requires that the sheriff's bond, in order that it may become effective as a part of his qualifications, shall be delivered, accepted, and approved by a designated officer or tribunal, the bond becomes operative only on delivery to the person authorized to receive it[9] The statutory provisions for the approval and filing of the bond are for the benefit and security of the public[10] Unless a statutory provision or order of court designates the mode of delivery, there is no precise form in which the delivery must be made, but it is sufficient if it is made by any acts or words which show an intention of the obligors to perfect the instrument[11] In the absence of a showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that a bond in the possession of the proper authorities has been accepted[12] If the principal delivers the bond contrary to an understanding with the sureties that it shall not be delivered until others have become obligated thereon, the sureties are nevertheless bound unless the obligee has accepted it with notice of the conditions under which the bond was intrusted to the principal.[13]

Ordinarily the sheriff's bond must be approved by a designated tribunal or official,[14] whose duty to approve is ministerial and not judicial,[15] and who, in respect of the approval of the bond, has no discretion other than to determine whether the security offered is sufficient,[16] and after approval his duties with respect thereto cease.[17] Where the statute empowers and requires the board of supervisors to approve the sheriff's bond, its approval of a bond, in which all the substantial requirements appear, is conclusive.[18] A duly elected sheriff is entitled to have the bond presented by him passed on and, if sufficient, approved by the officers whose approval is required by statute,[19] and if the bond is rejected for an insufficient or improper reason the proper remedy, it has been held, is mandamus to compel an acceptance of the bond,[20] and not a proceeding in quo warranto to oust the former incumbent from office.[21]

Under a statute providing for the filing of the bond with the clerk of court it is improper to deposit the bond with the court.[22] The clerk may be compelled by mandamus to receive a bond which has been executed within the prescribed time and approved by the judge.[23]

Although the bond is not recorded as provided by statute, it is nevertheless valid[24] Where no separate book is designated for the recording, a registry in the mortgage book has been held sufficient.[25] The proper court should keep a record of the delivery and acceptance of sheriffs' bonds,[26] and enter the approval of such bonds upon the minutes,[27] although a failure to do these things does not prevent the enforcement of a bond regularly given and accepted.[28]

Validity of bond. The validity of a bond accepted and approved by a judge of the county court cannot be affected by his negligence or mistake in the performance of an act not within the scope of his official duties[29] Where a sheriff's bond is joint and several, it is not invalidated by the sheriff's failure to sign it[30] It has been held that a sheriff's official bond which is not accepted by the county court within the time fixed by statute is void, although it was executed within such time,[31] but it has also been held that a bond given voluntarily by the sheriff after the time limited by statute, although bad as a statutory bond, is good as a common-law bond.[32] The failure of the justices of the orphans' court to attest a sheriff's bond does not affect its validity.[33] Where a sheriff's bond is given to "the justices composing" the county court, and one of such justices is also one of the obligors, the bond is void.[34] A sheriff's bond will not become void by a failure to take and subscribe the oath of office.[35]

Periodic renewal of bond. The sheriff is sometimes required by statute to renew his official bond periodically during his term of office,[36] and on his failure to comply with such a requirement his office may be declared to have become vacant.[37] Where the sheriff is not absolutely required to renew his general official bond annually, but it is the duty of the court to cause him to do so, unless the court requires a renewal there is no forfeiture of office[38]

New or additional bonds. Although a sheriff has been already inducted into office, and is acting under an official bond, duly executed and approved, there is nothing to prevent him from voluntarily executing another official bond[39] A statute providing that in case of the death, removal, or insolvency of a surety, or on application of a surety to be discharged from the bond, the sheriff, at the risk of a vacancy in office, must give new or additional security within a prescribed time, is not in conflict with a constitutional provision that sheriffs shall hold their offices for a specified term.[40]

A statute providing that the surety of any clerk or any other public officer may notify his principal that further security is required at the risk of a vacancy in office is applicable to a sheriff.[41] A statute providing that the court may require the sheriff to give an additional bond or bonds is applicable, without express mention, to the various bonds required of the sheriff under statutory provisions[42] On a proper application of a surety to be discharged, the duties of the court under some statutes are purely ministerial rather than judicial,[43] and if the court certifies a vacancy when in fact none exists an appointment by the governor is void and does not affect the rights of the incumbent.[44]

§ 8. Term of Office, Holding Over, and Vacancies

a. Term of office
b. Holding over
c. Vacancies

a. Term of Office

Ordinarily the term of office of sheriff is fixed by constitutional or statutory provisions.

Ordinarily the term of office of sheriff is fixed by constitutional or statutory provisions[45] Where the term of office is prescribed by the constitution, it is not within the power of the legislature to prolong or diminish it,[46] although such term may be changed by constitutional amendment.[47] In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the legislature having the power to create the office may fix the term thereof.[48] A statute providing that on the expiration of his term he shall vacate his office, but shall collect delinquent tax bills, does not extend the sheriff's term.[49]

Under some constitutional and statutory provisions the term of sheriff begins on his election or qualification and runs for a certain period thereafter,[50] or it may begin on a certain day after the election[51] A person who is elected to the office and qualifies is entitled to hold it for the full term to which he was elected,[52] and the term expires at the end of the particular term for which he was elected.[53] Where a sheriff is elected for a term of fixed length merely, and not with reference to some designated time when his tenure shall commence, his election entitles him to the office from the time that the term of his predecessor expires,[54] and if his predecessor dies or resigns before the expiration of his term the new sheriff is thereupon entitled to the office at once.[55]

It has been held that a constitutional provision that sheriffs shall hold their offices for two years means that the term of a sheriff shall be from one general election to another and not exactly two calendar years;[56] but it has also been held that where, under the law, an election gave only a right to be inducted into the office a provision that sheriffs should hold office for two years meant calendar years.[57] A statute changing the date of the commencement of the terms of sheriffs has been held void as creating a vacancy which in some counties could not be filled by the incumbent of the office holding over by reason of a constitutional limitation of tenure.[58] The induction of a sheriff

46. S.C.—Privette v. Grinnell, supra.

Continuance not implied
Provision continuing incumbent sheriff's term to end of odd-numbered year could not be implied in amended section of constitution dealing with election of city officers and certain county officers to be held in odd-numbered years, particularly in view of fact that, on adoption of like constitutional amendments in past, provision was expressly made for extension of incumbent's term of office until end of odd-numbered years.—Fitzgerald v. Cohen, 22 N.Y.S.2d 863, 175 Misc. 148, affirmed 22 N.Y.S.2d 527, 260 App.Div. 804.

Construction
(1) Word "years" is used as meaning official years, which may or may not correspond with calendar years.—Kirkpatrick v. King, 91 N.E.2d 785, 228 Ind 236.

(2) In constitutional amendment providing that, notwithstanding any other provision "hereof," sheriff of each county shall be elected at 1950 general election and each four years thereafter, quoted word refers to constitution which previously fixed sheriff's term at two years, and as thus construed amendment is not ambiguous.—Kirkpatrick v. King, supra.

(3) Sheriffs elected at 1948 general election for terms commencing Jan 1, 1950, would continue to hold office until Jan. 1, 1955, by virtue of proviso in constitutional amendment providing that sheriff holding office on Dec 31, 1950, who had been elected to such office for a period of less than two consecutive years immediately preceding should continue in office for four-year term commencing Jan 1, 1951, but proviso did not extend for additional four years terms of sheriffs elected in 1948 for two-year term from Jan 1, 1949, to Dec. 31, 1950.—Kirkpatrick v. King, supra.
Submission to voters
When general assembly authorized submission to voters of amendment increasing term of office of sheriff from two to four years and voters came to vote on question of its adoption, it is presumed that each acted in light of existing law fixing the first Monday of December next ensuing general election in November as time for beginning of term of office of sheriffs elected at such election.—Freeman v. Election in odd-numbered year
The term of the sheriff, who was elected for a term of three years in the general election of 1937, would expire at the end of 1940, notwithstanding that under the constitution an election for that office could be held only in odd-numbered years.—Fitzgerald v. Cohen, supra.

into office before the beginning of the term for which he was elected is a nullity.[59]

b. Holding Over

In the absence of constitutional or statutory restriction and sometimes by virtue of the constitution and statutes, a sheriff is entitled to hold his office until his successor is duly elected and qualified.

In the absence of constitutional or statutory restriction and sometimes by virtue of the constitution and statutes, a sheriff is entitled to hold his office until his successor is duly elected[60] and qualified,[61] and so, where a constitutional amendment or statutory provision readjusting the times of holding elections leaves an interval between the expiration of the term of a sheriff and the time when his successor can be elected, the incumbent is entitled to hold over during such period,[62] although no provision is made by the constitutional amendment or by statute for such interval,[63] and even though the effect of such holding over is to continue him in office for a longer consecutive period than is permitted by the constitution.[64]

A constitutional or statutory provision providing that every officer shall hold his office until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified applies to the office of sheriff.[65] The indefinite portion of time indicated by the phrase "until his successor shall be qualified" is as much a part of the term of office as the time which the sheriff is entitled absolutely to hold.[66] A sheriff, by assuming office under a new term following an election which was subsequently declared to be void, abandons his rights as a holdover.[67]

c. Vacancies

(1) In general
(2) Filling vacancies

(1) In General

Where a sheriff-elect is entitled, on qualifying, to hold office for a specified term, anything which prevents him from so doing creates a constructive or virtual vacancy in the office for his entire term.

Where a sheriff-elect is entitled, on qualifying, to hold office for a specified term, anything which prevents him from so doing creates a constructive or virtual vacancy in the office for his entire term,[68] which is as effectual to authorize an appointment to fill the office as a literal vacancy caused by his death after qualifying would be;[69] and hence, where the sheriff-elect dies after the term of his predecessor has expired, although before he has received notice of his election, the previous incumbent is not entitled to hold over for the succeeding term.[70] The office cannot be deemed vacant when it is in the possession of one designated by law to hold it through a prolongation of his term until his successor can be not only elected or appointed, but also qualified.[71] Where a sheriff holds over under an appointment to fill a vacancy, the arbitrary refusal of the county clerk to accept and approve a proper official bond does not create a vacancy.[72] No vacancy occurs when a sheriff is inducted into the armed forces of the United States.[73]

The expiration of a term creates a vacancy in office,[74] especially where the incumbent does not hold over,[75] and failure of the legislature to prescribe that the office shall be deemed vacant at the expiration of a term of an incumbent lawfully elected thereto does not change the fact that on such expiration the office is vacant.[76] A vacancy has been held to exist where there is no de jure sheriff,[77] and whenever the office is not occupied by some one elected by the people, and a particular period of time has intervened between the beginning

Expiration of leave of absence
Where a sheriff who had been inducted into the United States Army Reserve as a captain had been granted a thirty-day leave of absence by the governor, there would be no "vacancy," with respect to governor's power to fill vacancies in office, in sheriff's office on expiration of the thirty days.—In re Advisory Opinion to Governor, supra.

of the vacancy and the annual election of officers[78] The term "vacancy" is said to relate not only to the office which is to be filled, but to the term for which the appointment is to be made.[79] Under various constitutional or statutory provisions the office of sheriff may be declared vacant because of the ineligibility of the sheriff,[80] or the failure of the sheriff to give a new bond when required,[81] or the unauthorized and protracted absence of the sheriff from the county[82]

The failure of a sheriff to execute or renew the official bond required by the statute has been held not ipso facto to vacate his office,[83] but is merely a cause of forfeiture and vacancy which may be declared in a proper judicial proceeding,[84] but it has also been held that no formality of trial before the county commissioners' court is necessary to determine whether the office has become vacant by failure to give bond[85] A sheriff's acceptance of an incompatible office ipso facto vacates the office of sheriff,[86] or, according to other authority, warrants a declaration by the court that the office is vacated.[87] If the court accepts a bond not executed until after the time prescribed by the statute, it cannot subsequently declare the office vacant for failure to give the bond in time[88] Under a statute providing that, when certain grounds for the removal of the sheriff shall be presented to the governor, he shall publish a proclamation declaring the office vacant, and the office shall thereby and thereafter immediately be vacated, on such proclamation the office becomes vacant,[89] and it is not necessary to await the refusal of reinstatement by the governor in order to have a vacancy in the office.[90]

A vacancy in the office of sheriff which may be filled by appointment implies that no one has any title to the office,[91] and such a vacancy does not exist when judgment of ouster against the incumbent of the office is obtained on quo warranto on the ground that relator has a superior title.[92] The vacancy is to be declared by the officer or court designated by the statute,[93] but a statute authorizing a designated officer to certify to the executive the existence of the facts which under the law create a vacancy does not authorize such officer to declare the office vacant,[94] and if such officer certifies a vacancy when in fact none exists an appointment to fill such supposed vacancy is void and does not affect the right of the incumbent.[95]

Death. While the office of sheriff becomes vacant by the death of the incumbent during his term of office,[96] a vacancy in the office is not deemed to occur as a result of the death of one elected before the beginning of the new term where deceased has not qualified and where the term of the incumbent continues until a successor is appointed[97] Where the incumbent sheriff dies after his election to a new term but before he had qualified and before the expiration of his old term, the death creates a vacancy in the old term but not in the new term.[98]

(2) Filling Vacancies

The filling of a vacancy in the office of sheriff, which is not provided for by the constitution, is within the legislative power and discretion.

filling vacancies which may occur during the term, the mode of filling vacancies in the office is within the control of the legislature.[1] The power granted to the legislature to provide for filling vacancies does not imply a power to create an interval between the official terms of two persons elected to fill the office.[2]

By appointment. There can be no appointment in the office of sheriff until a vacancy occurs.[3] The power of appointment is exhausted when once exercised, and any subsequent appointment, until the incumbent has been removed or the office has become vacant, is void.[4] Constitutions and statutes ordinarily provide that under certain circumstances the office of sheriff may be filled by an appointment by the governor,[5] by county commissioners,[6] by a county court,[7] by commissioners of the court,[8] by the district judge,[9] or by the judge of probate, county clerk, and prosecuting attorney,[10] but a district court has been held to have no power to fill it.[11] Where the incumbent of the office of deputy sheriff cannot succeed to the duties of sheriff because of his ineligibility, the governor may appoint a sheriff.[12] A constitutional provision that the governor may appoint a sheriff to fill a vacancy is not abridged by a provision of a statute that the deputy sheriff may continue the duties of a deceased sheriff.[13] A statute authorizing the governor to fill vacancies by appointment is valid, although the constitution provides that sheriffs shall be chosen by the electors, and fails to confer the power of appointment on the governor in any case.[14] A constitutional requirement that sheriffs shall be chosen by the electors as often as vacancies shall occur does not mean that such vacancies may not be filled temporarily by the governor.[15] If the governor does not appoint a party to fill the vacancy, it is error to permit such party to qualify.[16] An appointment by the executive is complete on the delivery of the commission, and such commission is at least prima facie evidence that the person holding it is lawfully entitled to the office.[17]

Except where the term of office of an appointee is regulated by constitutional or statutory provi-

Election in odd-numbered years

Where the office of sheriff can be filled only in an election to be held in odd-numbered years, a vacancy, if any should occur on Jan 1, 1941, would be required to be filled by gubernatorial appointment.—Fitzgerald v Cohen, 22 N Y S 2d 863, 175 Misc 148, affirmed 22 N.Y S.2d 527, 260 App Div 804

Unexpired term less than one year

(1) Under constitution, governor had authority to fill vacancy in office of sheriff for unexpired term of less than year by appointment, if senate was in session and confirmed the appointment, but could not by recess appointment fill vacancy in office for unexpired term of less than one year.—State ex rel Palfrey v. Judges of Criminal District Court of Parish of Orleans, 5 So 2d 756, 199 La. 232

(2) Fact that legislature would not meet in regular session until after expiration of sheriff's unexpired term of office of less than year, so that person appointed to vacancy in such office by judges of criminal district court pursuant to constitutional provision conferring authority on judges to fill vacancy temporarily until vacancy is filled by appointment as provided by law, would probably serve until end of term, did not permit departure from constitutional provisions limiting governor's recess appointment to fill vacancy in office of sheriff for term of less than year to cases not otherwise provided for in constitution.—State ex rel Palfrey v. Judges of Criminal District Court of Parish of Orleans, supra.

(3) Where incumbent sheriff died on June 1 and it appeared that upon the following April 18 a successor would be elected for a full term, and that successor could take office on May 19, unexpired portion of term of incumbent sheriff was less than one year and governor had right to fill vacancy.—Blaize v. Jurisdiction does not depend on notice mentioned in statute providing that notice of vacancy in public office shall within ten days be given in writing to those having power of appointment, since such notice is intended to bring action, and, if action is had in proper instance without such notice, purpose of statute of not leaving a public office vacant, is accomplished.—Attorney General ex rel. sions,[18] as a rule such appointments are merely temporary and are operative only until a new sheriff can be elected,[19] and do not give the appointee the right to the office for the entire unexpired term of his predecessor.[20] Where a sheriff is reelected to succeed himself, but dies before qualifying, an appointee under particular constitutional and statutory provisions serves only until the expiration of the first term of the deceased sheriff,[21] and until the election and qualification of his successor.[22] Where the constitution restricts the length of time an appointee may serve, the legislature cannot enlarge the term.[23] An appointee to fill a vacancy holds, however, for the period fixed in the statute, without regard to the time the appointing power may fix for his tenure of office,[24] and holds office from the date of appointment and qualification and not from the date of the receipt of the commission.[25]

It has been held that a sheriff appointed to fill a vacancy is entitled to the benefit of a general statutory provision that officers shall hold over until their successors are elected and qualified.[26] It has also been held, however, that where one is appointed to fill a vacancy for an unexpired term his right to the office ceases on the expiration of the term for which he was originally appointed, and he is not entitled to hold over, although the sheriff elected for the succeeding term fails to qualify or the election for such term is void, but in such case there is again a vacancy in the office which can be filled by another appointment.[27]

By election. The policy of the states with respect to vacancies in elective offices such as the office of sheriff is to fill them by election as soon as is practicable,[28] but a constitution providing for the filling of vacancies by election does not mean that they must be filled by election as soon as they occur.[29] Ordinarily it is provided by the constitutions and statutes that the office of sheriff be filled for the unexpired term at the next general election or at a special election held for the purpose.[30] A stat-

Term of temporary appointee

Constitutional provision that sheriff appointed by judges of district court to fill vacancy temporarily shall serve until vacancy is filled by appointment as provided by law is controlled by the phrase as "provided by law," and means that temporary appointee shall serve until vacancy is filled by appointment by governor with advice and consent of senate if unexpired part of term is less than year, and does not mean that temporary appointee of judges shall serve only until governor can fill vacancy by recess appointment, since governor has no authority to make recess appointment under constitution in a case where temporary filling of vacancy is otherwise provided for in constitution.—State ex rel Palfrey v Judges of Criminal District Court of Parish of Orleans, 5 So 2d 756, 199 La 232.

Preserving status under civil service

Chief deputy sheriff could succeed to office of sheriff, on a vacancy occurring, for period pending a future election and at same time preserve his status as chief deputy under civil service statute while thus discharging duties of sheriff, where chief deputy did not thereafter offer himself as a candidate in the election—Foster v. Resignation and reappointment after new term

Sheriff, who was appointed to fill a vacancy caused by death of former sheriff after reelection but prior to expiration of old term, by resigning after period of new term had begun, in reality terminated term which he held by appointment and which normally would have ended on election and qualification of his successor. By his resignation and reappointment after new term normally would have commenced, he did not acquire any right to tenure which he did not have before, and he continued to hold the office until his successor was elected at the next general election and qualified—State ex rel. Election at which office may be filled

Where there was no regular election to be held in entire county for an officer in the same territory or boundary except a member of United States house of representatives, there could be no election for unexpired term of sheriff resulting from death of incumbent under constitutional provision that if unexpired term will not end at next succeeding annual election at which either city, town, county, "district or state officers" are to be elected, vacancy should be filled by election for remainder of the term, since a United States representative is not a "district or state officer" within the constitutional provision—White v Hubbard, 195 S.W 2d 781, 302 Ky 820.

ute providing for a proclamation by the governor for a special election to fill a vacancy in the office of sheriff is mandatory.[31] If a vacancy in the office occurs before the next general election but subsequent to the time provided by statute for the filling of the vacancy at the next general election, the vacancy cannot be filled at the next general election,[32] but may be filled at a special election called pursuant to the statute.[33]

In the absence of constitutional and statutory provisions prescribing when the term of a sheriff elected at a special election to fill a vacancy shall begin, the term of such sheriff commences to run from the date of the special election.[34] Under some constitutions it has been held that, where a person is elected to fill a vacancy in the office of sheriff, he does not hold during the unexpired term of his predecessor merely, but for the constitutional term of the office of sheriff,[35] although it has also been held that he is elected to fill the unexpired term and not the full term,[36] notwithstanding the ballot did not specify the length of time for which the candidate sought office.[37]

§ 9. Resignation, Abandonment, Forfeiture, Suspension, or Reinstatement

A sheriff may resign or abandon his office, and under constitutions and statutes may forfeit, be suspended from, or reinstated to, such office

Under a statute providing that the resignations of certain county and township officers shall be made to the clerk of the board of supervisors of the county, the mere manual transmission of a sheriff's resignation to the clerk by an attorney without authority and contrary to the sheriff's express directions is of no effect.[38] A freely made and unconditional resignation is effective when accepted by the proper authority.[39] Where a sheriff transmits his resignation, to take immediate effect, to the proper authorities, and it is received by them, a vacancy exists in the office,[40] and he cannot withdraw such resignation,[41] even with the concurrence of the authorities to whom it was sent.[42] Where threats are made that proceedings would be brought to remove the sheriff from office unless he resigned, such threats do not constitute duress inducing the resignation.[43] Where a person, prior to appointment and qualification, is required to sign an undated resignation which would terminate his tenure before the expiration of the term of the vacant office, such resignation has been held to be void.[44]

Abandonment. If a lawful sheriff, whose sureties have been discharged on their own application, and whose office has been certified to the governor to be vacant because of his failure to give a new bond, when in fact there is no vacancy, accepts an appointment by the governor as in case of vacancy, such acceptance does not amount to an abandonment of his right to the office under his former title.[45]

Forfeiture. The office may be forfeited at the suit of the proper authorities designated by the constitution or statute.[46] Where the constitution directs suit to be brought in the name of the attorney general, such official is the proper party,[47] and a statute providing for suits against usurpers and intruders into office is inapplicable.[48] Unless the county requires its renewal, a failure to renew an official bond of a sheriff does not work a forfeiture of the office.[49]

Suspension The governor cannot suspend a sheriff from office unless authorized by constitution or statute,[50] but sheriffs have been held to accept election to office subject to suspension by the governor for specified grounds.[51] Where the constitution prescribes the grounds for which the governor may suspend officers, a statute, in so far as it attempts to enlarge the powers of the governor in the suspension of sheriffs, is unconstitutional.[52] A statute authorizing the governor to remove a sheriff from office for malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of his official duties gives him by implication, as an incident to such power, the power to suspend a sheriff pending removal proceedings.[53]

A statute may provide that the sheriff may be suspended for cause by designated courts.[54] A statute, authorizing a suspension by the circuit court of any county or township officer pending an indictment for nonfeasance in office, has been held applicable to a sheriff.[55] Under a statute authorizing a district judge to suspend an officer against whom removal proceedings are brought, such judge may suspend a sheriff after judgment of removal and before jurisdiction is divested by the perfection of an appeal.[56] The suspension of a sheriff from office does not destroy, but merely suspends, the acquired right to the office.[57] It renders the incumbent incapable of functioning until the disability is removed.[58] Where the county supervisors are authorized to appoint a temporary sheriff on the suspension of the sheriff by the court, such appointee, and not the deputy of the suspended sheriff, is authorized to discharge the duties of the office.[59] The procedure followed in suspending a sheriff should meet every requirement of the constitution or statute.[60] In at least one jurisdiction the governor may not suspend a sheriff while the senate is in session,[61] and a review of the charges preferred by executive order[62] and the sufficiency of the evidence to support the charges[63] are questions solely for the determination of the senate, and it may adopt such rules of procedure as it sees fit.[64]

Reinstatement. A sheriff suspended by the governor may be reinstated by him,[65] although the senate is in session at the time.[66]

c. Proceedings

a. In General

The removal of a sheriff is a matter usually regulated by constitution or statute.

The removal of a sheriff is a matter usually regulated by constitution or statute.[67] Where the constitution is silent as to a method of removal, the legislature may provide a method,[68] such as that the governor shall have the power of removal,[69] or that sheriffs may be removed by judicial proceedings.[70] However, the governor cannot remove a sheriff from office unless the power to do so is conferred by the constitution or statutes.[71] Statutes authorizing the removal of a sheriff by the governor are ordinarily penal in their nature, and as such are to be strictly construed.[72] Although a sheriff is an elective officer, a statute authorizing his removal by the governor is not in violation of a constitutional provision providing that the governor may remove in certain cases any officer whom he appoints.[73] The power of a court summarily to remove sheriffs is an extraordinary one, to be executed out of the usual course of the administration of the law, and should never be called into operation except in cases of great necessity and for clear and manifest cause, and even then should be exercised with great caution and in strict conformity with the authority given.[74] Under constitution or statute, the sole power vested in the governor to remove a sheriff after a hearing may be executive.[75]

A statute allowing the governor to remove all officers[76] or county officers[77] appointed by him to fill a vacancy is applicable to a sheriff; and "county office," in a statute providing for the removal for cause by the governor of an appointee to fill a vacancy, includes the office of a sheriff, even though a separate statute providing for the appointment of a sheriff to fill a vacancy contains no removal clause.[78]

What amounts to removal. A statute providing for the election of sheriffs by the people, and that the persons then holding the office of sheriff in the several counties shall hold it until a designated day, and no longer, unless elected by the people, is a legal and effective removal from office, after the day named, of those sheriffs who are not so elected.[79]

b. Grounds for Removal

The causes for which a sheriff may be removed are usually enumerated in the constitution or statutes, and, in addition to other reasons, he may be removed for malfeasance, misconduct, or neglect of duty.

The causes for which a sheriff may be removed are usually enumerated in the constitution or statutes.[80] While the legislature may designate offenses within the meaning of the constitution, it cannot enlarge or extend the terms of that instrument by adding offenses, as grounds for removal, not within the purview of the constitutional provision.[81] A sheriff who has made an honest and reasonably intelligent effort to do his duty will not be removed, although he is not wholly successful.[82] A sheriff will not be removed for a technical disregard of laws governing his official conduct, where his acts were done pursuant to advice of counsel and in good faith,[83] or where an honest difference of opinion exists as to the meaning of statutes under which he is acting,[84] or for mere irregularities,[85] or for failure to make arrests and execute process, not showing corruption, gross neglect, or inefficiency,[86] or for failure to comply with a verbal command of the judge to convey prisoners to the jail of an adjacent county, where such an order is not lawful authority to the sheriff to make the transfer.[87]

The term "bad faith," within the meaning of a statute providing for the summary removal of a sheriff where he in bad faith refuses or neglects to perform the duties of his office, does not mean "corruptly," which involves some affirmative, ulterior motive,[88] but may involve merely the absence of a proper motive.[89] The sheriff may be removed for sufficient cause,[90] and a removal for cause means a cause which is constitutionally and legally sufficient to warrant the exercise of the power,[91]

"Unless sooner removed for malfeasance in office"

Under constitutional provision that sheriff shall serve for four years and until his successor is duly elected and qualified, "unless sooner removed for malfeasance in office," the designation of malfeasance as a ground for removal does not exclude all other grounds under doctrine "expressio unius est exclusio alterius." "Unless sooner removed for malfeasance in office" is but a limitation of term of office which it modifies, and is not a provision for removal, and, hence, constitutional amendment authorizing assembly to provide for removal from office of county, city, town, and township officers, on conviction of willful, corrupt, or fraudulent violation or neglect of official duty applies to a sheriff, although amendment is limited to removal of officers "not otherwise provided for in this constitution"—State, on Inf of McKittrick, v Williams, supra.

Commissions for collection of tax

Sufficient cause was shown in proceedings to remove a sheriff from office on ground that he had received more money than that to which he was entitled in connection with collection of state and county taxes where there was no law authorizing sheriffs to charge and receive and a constitutional provision authorizing the governor to remove a sheriff without specifying the grounds contemplates that the removal shall be for legal cause.[92] Where a sheriff unlawfully demands and recovers from an accused person in custody a sum of money as a condition precedent to his release on an appearance bond and in advance of any trial, he commits extortion for which he may be removed [93]

Intemperance in the use of intoxicating liquors or narcotics as unfits a sheriff for the discharge of his duties, within a constitutional provision providing for impeachment by a court, does not mean that a sheriff, unfit on one occasion to discharge the duties of his office, should be impeached.[94]

A sheriff may be removed for corruption in office,[95] and a sheriff who, besides receiving compensation for services of a bailiff, procures the allowance to himself of fees for services of the latter, knowing he is not entitled thereto, is guilty of corruption in office,[96] although he makes no false returns.[97] He may also be removed from office on conviction of willful, corrupt, or fraudulent violation of official duty,[98] or on sentence to the penitentiary [99] Nonfeasance may be a valid ground for the removal of a sheriff,[1] and nonfeasance has been held to include the neglect of a sheriff to perform his duty in the arrest of one attempting to bribe him [2] A failure to enforce the law may be ground for removal.[3]

When a sheriff ignores the law and advertises each piece of property separately instead of in a list, and in larger type than such as the law requires, in a newspaper which he personally owns, he is guilty of extortion and oppression in office.[4] The fact that after the election and qualification of a sheriff his name is stricken from the list of registered and qualified voters is not ground for his removal.[5] A sheriff will not be removed from office for misconduct of his deputy where he was in ignorance of the misconduct up to the time of filing of the suit for removal,[6] or for a crime of his deputy where he has taken proper measures to prevent the crime and after its commission has brought the deputy to justice.[7]

Malfeasance. The sheriff may be removed for malfeasance in office [8] Malfeasance has been held to include permission by a sheriff to a prisoner to escape,[9] and he is guilty of malfeasance in knowingly permitting bets on horse races at tracks he allowed to operate.[10]

Misconduct. A sheriff who knowingly or willfully misconducts himself in office may be removed.[11] The removal for misconduct does not mean official misconduct, it has been held, where the constitution or statutes do not so provide.[12] Misconduct has been held to include the failure of a sheriff to enter and promptly pay over tax collections as provided by statute,[13] and the appearance of a sheriff as attorney for one charged with crime before a justice of the peace of his county [14] Official misconduct, within the meaning of the constitutions and statutes, has been held to include such commissions as sheriff admitted charging and receiving under alleged contract with county board of commissioners of roads and revenues. —Adamson v Leathers, supra.

adultery,[15] the collection of illegal fees,[16] and the presentation of unfounded claims for services.[17] Willful misconduct, in order to justify a removal, has been held to include voluntary intoxication while engaged in the performance of an official duty.[18]

Neglect of duty. A sheriff may be removed for neglect of duty,[19] or on conviction of neglect of official duty.[20] Neglect of duty has been construed as a careless or intentional failure to exercise due diligence in the performance of an official duty,[21] and to include such acts as the failure to enforce the prohibitory liquor laws.[22] It does not include acts amounting to malfeasance,[23] such as misconduct[24] and intoxication.[25] Where it is shown that the sheriff enforced the laws in every locality in which he had enough information and necessary co-operation, his failure to enforce such laws in a few localities where he received no co-operation does not show a neglect of duty [26]

Under a provision providing for the removal of an officer for neglect and refusal to perform official duties, it is not necessary to show that a sheriff acted with an evil or corrupt attempt or motive;[27] but it is sufficient that the omission to perform was intentional, designed, and without lawful excuse.[28] Neglect, as used in a constitution providing for the impeachment of a sheriff by the court whenever a prisoner is taken from his custody and put to death or injured, means a failure to do and perform some duty of the office [29] Willful neglect of duty has been held to include the permission of a sheriff to a prisoner to be unlawfully at large,[30] the failure of a sheriff to enforce the prohibitory liquor laws[31] or to report their violation to the prosecuting attorney as provided by law,[32] and a failure to take a prisoner before a magistrate before commitment to jail [33] A willful neglect of duty does not necessarily import an evil motive [34]

Failure to give bond. Provision is sometimes made for the removal of a sheriff for failure to qualify by giving bond or for failure to give additional security on motion by the sureties [35] A statute providing for the removal of clerks and other public officers who fail to give additional security at the instance of their sureties is applicable to a sheriff.[36] A statute providing for the removal of a sheriff by a county court on his failure to give a new bond does not contravene a constitutional provision subjecting sheriffs to indictment for malfeasance or misfeasance in office.[37] A district court is not deprived of jurisdiction to remove a sheriff who fails to give bond after reëlection by virtue of a constitutional provision authorizing officers to continue their duties until their successors are qualified.[38] The motive of a commissioners' court in removing a sheriff for failure to give the required bond is immaterial.[39]

Offenses before election and during prior term. In some jurisdictions a sheriff may be removed for offenses committed during a prior term,[40] at least if there has been no intervening term in which the office has been held by another person,[41] but in other jurisdictions offenses committed during a prior term do not furnish cause for removal from office.[42] Where a statute providing that no officer shall be removed from office for any act he may have committed prior to his election to office, a sheriff cannot be removed for offenses committed during a prior term of office.[43] A sheriff may be removed, it has been held, for misconduct prior to his election, affecting his usefulness as a public officer,[44] as where he corruptly promises to appoint another his counsel in the event of his election.[45]

(1) In General

The procedure for removing sheriffs from office usually is prescribed by constitutional or statutory provisions.

The procedure for removing sheriffs from office usually is prescribed by constitutional or statutory provisions.[46] The power conferred on the governor to remove must be exercised in strict pursuance of the constitution or statutes prescribing the manner.[47] Under statutory provisions authorizing the removal of sheriffs by the governor and providing that the governor may direct the attorney general or county attorney to conduct an inquiry into the charges made, the governor himself may conduct the inquiry.[48] An original proceeding in an appellate court to remove will be dismissed where the controversy can be heard better in a district court.[49]

A court has no jurisdiction summarily to remove under a statute allowing removal for nonfeasance where the evidence shows the sheriff is guilty of acts of misfeasance.[50] A constitutional provision authorizing all officers to continue to perform their duties until their successors shall qualify does not deprive a court of jurisdiction under a statute to remove a sheriff who fails to give bond after reelection.[51] An action may lie to enjoin the holding of a recall election of a sheriff where the provisions of the act authorizing the proceedings are not deemed complied with.[52]

The power exercised by a governor in conducting an inquiry into charges made is said to be quasi-judicial in character.[53] An action by the state to remove a sheriff under some provisions is said to be a civil suit,[54] although, in so far as compelling the sheriff to be a witness against himself, a judicial proceeding has been considered criminal in its nature.[55] A summary proceeding instituted by citizens has been held to be quasi-criminal only.[56] An action by a county board of commissioners to remove a sheriff is said to be a special proceeding as regards the quantum of proof.[57]

A removal on accusation by a grand jury under the statute is said to be a special proceeding[58] which is to be conducted in all respects in the same manner as a trial on an indictment for a misdemeanor.[59] Where it is not alleged in the petition to oust the sheriff that the relators have suffered or are threatened with some damage peculiar to themselves as individuals, as a result of the alleged acts sought to be complained of, the right involved is a public right as distinguished from a private right.[60]

Notice and hearing. Constitutional and statutory provisions for notice to a sheriff of the charges preferred and for an opportunity to be heard thereon in his defense must be complied with.[61] Under such provision the governor's power of removal is not absolute,[62] and the charges must consist of matters against which a public officer may reasonably be required to defend himself.[63] A statute providing that, if the assessment list of taxable property is not returned according to law by the sheriff, the governor, on an ex parte certificate of neglect of this duty, shall declare the office vacant is repugnant to the constitution as depriving the sheriff of notice of the charge and a trial.[64] In a summary proceeding before a district court, a rule requiring the sheriff to show cause why he should not be removed was held to answer the purpose of a citation on the ground that he is supposed to be always in court and to be apprised of its orders.[65] A statute providing for the removal of a county officer after trial and conviction has been held to apply to sheriffs elected or appointed for a full term,[66] and to such sheriffs only,[67] and not to an appointee of the governor to fill a vacancy where a separate statute permits removal by the governor.[68]

Defenses. In a suit by the state to remove a sheriff for misconduct in collecting claims against the state, it is no defense that pursuant to statute the sheriff's accounts were approved by the district court.[69] The fact that an act committed by a sheriff is punishable as a crime does not affect his liability to removal from office for the same act.[70] Under a provision requiring officers to devote their time personally to their official duties, the act of a sheriff in absenting himself from the performance of his duties is not excused by the fact that his duties were performed in his absence by his deputies as well as, or better, than he would have performed them.[71]

The fact that the sheriff's failure to perform his official duties may be due to his own weakness and moral delinquency is no defense.[72] The fact that a sheriff-elect had qualified by giving bond under a previous appointment does not preclude his removal for failure to give a new bond after his election as required by law.[73] In a suit to remove a sheriff on the ground of ineligibility, the state is not estopped to deny the eligibility of the sheriff on the ground that in a suit subsequently filed for his removal it was averred that he was commissioned and qualified where such averment was not for the purpose of raising such issue.[74] It has been held that the sheriff's claim that he did not know what his duties were is no defense.[75] A statute creating a prescription applicable to the civil liability of a sheriff for acts of misfeasance and nonfeasance has no application to proceedings for his removal under the constitution.[76]

(2) Parties

Constitutions and statutes usually provide what authority may institute proceedings to remove a sheriff.

Constitutions and statutes usually provide what authority may institute proceedings to remove a sheriff,[77] and an attorney general may have the power on his own initiative to sue to remove the sheriff.[78] Where the constitution authorizes a proceeding by the state for the removal of a sheriff, the fact that the title of the action reveals the names of the accusers as well as the state does not invalidate the proceeding.[79]

(3) Pleading

Some official delinquency or some default or occurrence since his election, showing his unfitness for the office, must be alleged against the sheriff sought to be removed.

General allegations of incompetency or unfitness do not show sufficient cause for the removal of a sheriff.[80] Some official delinquency or some default or occurrence since his election, showing his unfitness for the office, must be alleged against him.[81] An allegation that the sheriff willfully, tacitly neglected and refused to enforce the laws is not bad because the word "tacitly" is not found in the statute providing for removal of officers.[82] Under a statutory provision authorizing the removal of a sheriff by summary proceedings initiated on a written accusation verified by the oath of any person, an accusation need not allege that the accusers are electors of the county.[83]

Failure to suppress riot. Where the ground of removal alleged is the failure of a sheriff to suppress a riot, the accusation may be in general terms,[84] and it is not necessary to describe the riot in the language of a statute defining "riot."[85]

Misconduct during term of office. In jurisdictions where the offense must be committed during the present term of the sheriff, the petition should allege such fact,[86] but the defect may be cured by an amendment;[87] and a charge that the sheriff during his terms of office removed and disposed of intoxicating liquors in his possession without a court order is sufficiently definite to include the term of office which the sheriff is filling.[88]

In proceeding before governor While the strict rules which apply to pleadings in courts should not prevail in removal proceedings before the governor,[89] enough should be made to appear to show that the sheriff is guilty of the charge.[90]

Setting up defense. Any matters which tend to justify the neglect of a sheriff to perform his duty are matters of defense which need not be anticipated in an accusation;[91] but, where the action is a civil proceeding, the sheriff must answer as in other actions.[92] In a proper case a demurrer to a defense may be sustained[93] and such defense stricken from the answer.[94]

(4) Evidence

The general rules of evidence govern in proceedings to remove a sheriff.

In an original proceeding on information of impeachment and prayer for ouster, the relator has the burden of proving the guilt of the sheriff beyond all reasonable doubt[95] In a proceeding by the state on accusation of a grand jury that a sheriff corruptly omitted to levy on property under a tax warrant, the burden of proof is on the sheriff to show the illegality of the warrant,[96] and it is not necessary for the state to show that the tax warrant was legal as long as it was regular on its face and issued by a competent officer.[97]

General rules as to admissibility of evidence apply[98] In a summary action to oust a sheriff for neglect of duty and unauthorized release of prisoners, evidence of alleged neglect of duty other than duties chargeable in the information is properly admitted as bearing on the sheriff's intent or motive.[99] Error in the admission of nunc pro tunc amendments of judgments of imprisonment in a summary action to remove a sheriff was harmless where the judgments were sufficient without amendment.[1] In a proceeding by the state to remove a sheriff for neglect of duty, an information filed by the prosecuting attorney charging the sheriff with assault was not admissible where it did not appear that the sheriff was convicted thereunder.[2] Excluding testimony of a custom of sheriffs to permit prisoners to run at large is proper where the custom is repugnant to express statutory provisions.[3] Where a sheriff cannot be removed for acts committed during a prior term, the admission of such acts has been held to constitute error,[4] although it has also been held that evidence of similar conduct during a prior term is admissible for the purpose of showing his habit, custom, and method and manner of performing duties.[5]

No question for jury

In proceedings to remove sheriff from office on ground that he had received more money than that to which he was entitled in connection with collection of state and county taxes, where, with plaintiff's demurrer to portions of defendant's answer properly sustained and with parts of answer attacked by demurrer stricken, the answer admitted that defendant had collected commissions as alleged, but denied that they were illegal, there was no question for jury to pass on—Adamson v. General rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence govern in proceedings to remove a sheriff.[6] Where the offenses of giving away and selling intoxicating liquors are the same offense, evidence that a sheriff gave away or sold intoxicating liquors is sufficient to sustain an allegation charging that he permitted intoxicating liquors to be given away in his presence and with his knowledge[7] Where the proceeding is civil in its nature, it is not necessary to prove the guilt of a sheriff beyond a reasonable doubt,[8] and it is sufficient to charge the jury that guilt must be proved by a clear preponderance of the evidence,[9] but in impeachment proceedings before a court, it has been held that the court, in order to convict, must be convinced of the sheriff's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.[10]

(5) Trial

The proceedings to remove a sheriff may be summary or he may be entitled to a jury trial, depending on the provisions therefor.

In at least one jurisdiction the proceedings to remove a sheriff are summary, and he is not entitled to a jury trial[11] Although a sheriff may be entitled to a jury trial where he is accused of misfeasance or malfeasance in office,[12] and may be summarily tried where he is accused of nonfeasance,[13] where he is accused of malfeasance, he cannot be summarily tried because nonfeasance also is pleaded since that is a mere conclusion of the pleader[14] Where a board of county commissioners is authorized to vacate the office of sheriff on receipt of a certificate from the clerk or auditor that the sheriff is in default to the county for funds collected, the board cannot consider the acts of a defaulting sheriff without first receiving such certificate.[15] A constitutional provision requiring that in a summary proceeding before a district court the cause of removal shall be spread on the court record is for the reason that the order and cause may be seen and known, and, if necessary, revised and corrected by appeal.[16]

Where the statute prescribes the manner in which the case should be submitted to the jury, a substantial compliance is sufficient[17] An instruction that the sheriff has the duty to enforce the criminal laws of the state is not prejudicial for the failure to instruct as to the correlative duties resting on other officers[18] Where the nature of the proceeding is civil, the trial court has the right to direct a verdict against a sheriff if the evidence would warrant such a direction in a civil case, and, if the facts thus found, or any of them, constitute as a matter of law any one of the grounds for removal enumerated in the statute, enter a judgment for removal[19]

(6) Verdict; Judgment; Review; Costs

General rules as to verdicts, judgments, review, and costs apply in proceedings to remove a sheriff from office

Where, in a proceeding for the removal of the sheriff from office for failure to qualify and to execute his bond as sheriff and tax collector, defendant admitted that he had never qualified after his election, a verdict finding that defendant had not "neglected and failed to present and have approved" official bonds as sheriff, and "take the oath of office as such sheriff within the time prescribed by law," was insufficient to sustain a judgment for defendant[20]

Review Where the removal of a sheriff by a court is irregular or for insufficient cause, the order or judgment is subject to revision on appeal.[21] In a summary action under a statute it has been held that, where the statute does not provide for appeals from interlocutory orders, an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer will not lie,[22] and a provision in the statute authorizing an appeal as provided by law in a civil action contemplates only an appeal from a final judgment.[23] On certiorari the court has refused to vacate the commission of a person who had been elected and was acting as sheriff, although ineligible, because it deemed that the public service would suffer by such removal.[24]

While the action of the governor may be reviewed in a direct proceeding,[25] in an indirect proceeding, as long as the governor's action in removing a sheriff is within the limits of the power conferred on him, the courts cannot review the proceedings before him.[26] He is the exclusive judge, as far as the courts are concerned, of the sufficiency of the proved charges, and his findings are not reviewable by any court.[27]

Costs. In an action by the state to remove a sheriff from office, in some jurisdictions the state is not required to pay any costs, and cannot be required to make a deposit of jury costs.[28]

Restoration after reversal. Where a judgment removing a sheriff from office and declaring the office vacant is reversed, an order of court is not necessary to restore the sheriff to his office.[29]

§ 11. Title to, and Possession of, Office

A person possessing all the qualifications required by law to vote and hold office at the time he is elected and qualified as sheriff of a county has a vested right in the office of which he cannot be deprived except for cause and by due process of law.

A person possessing all the qualifications required by law to vote and hold office at the time he is elected and qualified as sheriff of a county has a vested right in the office of which he cannot be deprived except for cause[30] and by due process of law.[31] A sheriff-elect has not such a complete title to the office, however, as will entitle him to a mandamus to compel his induction into the office until he has given bond with sufficient sureties who have justified.[32] It has been held that a governor's commission of an appointee gives him prima facie title to the sheriff's office.[33] If an ex-sheriff is entitled to recover the office of sheriff, he will recover it regardless of whether or not the incumbent is entitled to hold the office,[34] but, if he is not entitled to recover the office, then he has no interest, not common to the public at large, in the incumbent's lack of qualifications.[35]

A sheriff who wishes to prove his title to the office must produce record evidence;[36] but a third person may, in his own behalf, prove by parol that the alleged sheriff acted as such officer.[37] An order of court appointing a person sheriff is admissible to prove that he was sheriff,[38] and a sheriff's official bond is competent evidence to show that he was sheriff[39] and was in office at a particular time.[40] The fact that a person acted as sheriff at a certain time is, as against him, prima facie evidence that he was sheriff,[41] and proof by reputation that a certain person was the sheriff has been held sufficient to establish his official character.[42] Where a person has acted as sheriff, he is estopped to deny his incumbency and official character.[43]

Proceedings to determine right to office. Jurisdiction of proceedings to try title to office or to try actions involving title to office is controlled by constitutional or statutory provisions.[44] In a proceeding by quo warranto to try the title to the office of sheriff, the question is one as to the de jure title to the office and not as to a de facto office or officer.[45] In a suit against a sheriff and ex officio tax collector to determine his right to hold the office, no advantage can be taken of respondent for declining to make a settlement on terms with which he was under no legal obligation to comply.[46] One appointed as sheriff to fill an unexpired term is not estopped to claim that his appointment extended to the succeeding term by the fact that he applied for the appointment to the succeeding term where on such application he stipulates that he waives no rights under his former appointment.[47]

Under some statutes authorizing suit to try title to the office to be brought by the attorney general, provisions for obtaining leave from a judge are only applicable to suits by private parties and not to suits by the attorney general.[48] The right of a sheriff to his office cannot be collaterally questioned by third persons.[49]

In an action to compel surrender of the office of sheriff, together with the effects thereof, the complaint must state the essentials of the cause of action,[50] and new matter used as a defense by the incumbent must be pleaded.[51] A plea of denial by the hold-over incumbent in such an action simply controverts the material allegations of the complaint and forces the candidate for the office to prove them,[52] and the evidence must correspond with, and be confined to, the issues raised by the pleadings.[53] Where, in an action by the defeated candidate against the successful candidate for the office of sheriff, it is alleged that the latter is an alien and that he has fraudulently concealed that fact from the electors, allegations in the answer of facts tending to refute the charge of fraud are material.[54]

In proceedings to ascertain whether a sheriff is entitled to hold the office, it is incumbent on him to prove his eligibility;[55] and, where a party declares that the office is vacant by reason of the failure of the incumbent on reelection to qualify within the time prescribed, he has the burden of proving such allegation.[56] Where an appointee under the law serves only for the unexpired term of the deceased sheriff, testimony of members of a commissioners' court respecting the intent of the court in making the appointment was properly excluded.[57] In an action to compel the hold-over incumbent to surrender the office of sheriff and the effects thereof, evidence that the relator had been declared the successful candidate by the county board is sufficient to defeat a motion of nonsuit.[58]

Proceedings to protect possession of office. A court of equity may, at a suit of a lawful sheriff, in possession of his office, interfere by injunction to restrain another person from usurping, intruding on, or exercising the duties of the office,[59] but, where a person is in lawful possession of the office, an injunction will not lie at the instance of a former sheriff.[60]

§ 12. De Facto Sheriffs

A person who has been duly elected sheriff and exercises the duties of the office is sheriff de facto, although his bond is defective or is not executed within the time prescribed by law.

A person who has been duly elected sheriff and exercises the duties of the office is sheriff de facto, although his bond is defective[61] or is not executed within the time prescribed by law;[62] and a sheriff who has properly qualified by giving the bond required by statute, and who is reelected at the next election, but fails to renew the bond, is a de facto sheriff after the expiration of the first term.[63] So, also, although the statute makes the election of a defaulter to any office of trust or profit void, where a defaulter is elected sheriff, and acts as such, he is sheriff de facto.[64] A sheriff duly elected as such and exercising the duties of the office is a de facto sheriff although he has not received his commission,[65] but a person attempting to hold the office of sheriff in opposition to the authority of the United States and the laws and decisions of the courts of the state cannot be regarded as a de facto officer.[66]

and qualified to exercise the office,[67] and, although there may be a question of the validity of an appointment, where such appointment is ratified and confirmed by the proper agency, the sheriff is not a de facto officer of his county.[68]

B. CONSTABLES

§ 13. Election or Appointment

a. In general
b. Time, mode, and validity of election
c. Time, mode, and validity of appointment
d. Record and evidence of appointment or election

a. In General

Constables may be selected either by election or appointment, in accordance with constitutional or statutory provisions.

Under varying constitutional and statutory provisions selection of a constable may be effected either by election or by appointment.[70] Where the constitution provides for election, a statute providing for appointment is of no effect,[71] and, in like manner, a municipal ordinance with respect to the election of constables is void when it conflicts with a state statute on the subject.[72] Where a statute providing for appointment is superseded by a statute providing for election, an appointment cannot be legally made.[73] Statutes authorizing municipal authorities to appoint a town constable apply to all incorporated towns where such statutes are not inconsistent with special acts of incorporation or other special laws.[74] An appointment by the proper officials acting under constitutional or statutory authorization confers a good title to the office.[75]

Number of constables. The courts have upheld the validity of statutes regulating the number of constables to be elected by municipalities in accordance with their population.[76] A constitutional provision directing that the different counties shall be laid off in districts of convenient size and providing for the election of constables for the different districts does not limit the power of the legislature to increase the number.[77] Where a statute provides that in cities of various populations there shall be the same number of constables as there are justices of the peace and limits the number of justices without reference to a limitation on the number of constables, the legislative intent is to restrict the number of constables to the number of justices of the peace.[78]

b. Time, Mode, and Validity of Election

Statutes regulating the time and mode of elections of constables are mandatory in character. No one may be elected constable of a new precinct before such precinct becomes legally existent.

The requirements of statutes regulating the time for election of constables are mandatory.[79] Under statutes prescribing the method of election of constables, it has been held that the vote must be for definite and identified individuals rather than for indefinite persons who may fulfill certain qualifications.[80] A statute declaring that a justice of the peace, if one is to be had, must preside at the constable's election is mandatory as affecting the legality of the election.[81]

Where the statutes give notice of the time and place of election and of the officer to be elected, an election of a constable is valid, although the township supervisors, by proclamation, called for the election of two constables, whereas the township was entitled to elect only one.[82] No one may be elected constable of a new precinct before such precinct becomes legally existent,[83] and where a candidate is nominated for constable of a new precinct to be created and voted for as such by electors of an old precinct, who will eventually become electors of the new precinct, his purported election cannot make him constable of either the new precinct[84] or the old precinct,[85] both the nomination and the election being invalid.[86] In some jurisdictions the county court is the proper judge of the return of the election of a constable, and its adjudication that a person was elected cannot, while it remains in force, be questioned.[87]

c. Time, Mode, and Validity of Appointment

A statute which prescribes a mode of appointment of constables different from that authorized by the constitution is void. The appointment must be made by the person or persons authorized by law.

A statute which prescribes a mode of appointment different from that authorized by the constitution is void;[88] but constitutional provisions for the election of constables by the voters have been construed as not repealing a mode of selection by appointment pursuant to charter granted by a territorial legislature before adoption of the state constitution.[89] Although it may be the duty of the county court to lay off the county into districts, and, in the appointment of constables, to designate their districts, an appointment of a constable for the county generally is not void.[90]

By whom appointment made. Under some statutes providing for the appointment of a constable by the mayor and common council without any direction as to the mode of appointment, the mayor should nominate the constable subject to confirmation by the council,[91] and an appointment by the council of one not nominated by the mayor is illegal.[92] Under other statutes providing for the appointment by the mayor and city council, the appointment is properly made by the mayor and council by ordinance rather than by the mayor subject to confirmation by the council.[93] An order of court appointing a person constable is void and confers no authority where it does not appear that any case existed in which the court could by law exercise the power of appointing a constable.[94] Statutes authorizing one government official to appoint constables are invalid in so far as they attempt to take away the constitutional power of other officials to make such appointments.[95]

Time when appointment by ordinance effective. Under an ordinance appointing constables, the appointment takes effect, it has been held, when the ordinance does, although no commission or certificate of appointment has issued.[96]

d. Record and Evidence of Appointment or Election

Court records may afford sufficient evidence of the appointment or election of constables.

A record of the county court reciting that the court appointed a certain person constable, he having been elected in a certain district, is sufficient evidence of an election by the people, and not of an appointment by the court;[97] and it has been held that a statement in the record of the county court that a certain person, having been "appointed" constable, came into court and qualified, must be understood to mean that he had been elected by the people according to law.[98] An entry on the county court records that a certain person was permitted to renew his bond as constable is not evidence that such person was duly appointed a constable.[99] Parol evidence that a person acted as constable is admissible against him;[1] and it has also been held that proof of general reputation and acting as constable is competent evidence on behalf of the person claiming to have been constable,[2] although the township records, where these have been properly kept, are the best evidence of such official character.[3]

Ordinarily residence in the district of his appointment is essential to the eligibility of a constable. Where the legislature has laid down the standard of eligibility of candidates, other bodies may not vary such standard.

Residence in the district in which he is to serve is essential to the eligibility of a person for the office of constable under common-law principles[4] and by virtue of provisions of some constitutions and statutes[5] Such residence has been held necessary for a constable by implication from statutes requiring local residence for selectmen of towns[6] or officers of boroughs[7] Further it may be required that candidates for the office of constable shall be qualified voters of the district[8]

Where the legislature has fixed the qualifications of candidates for the office of constable, the commissioners' court may not add to, or take from, such qualifications[9]

Disqualifications. A mere charge of crime, of which one has never been convicted, does not render one ineligible for the office of constable at the discretion of a court authorized to select the officer.[10] Where the statute forbids the reelection of a constable who fails on or before a certain day in each year "to pay over all moneys collected by him to the treasury to which they belong," the mere fact that certain taxes remain uncollected has been held not to preclude the reelection of a constable.[11]

§ 15. Qualification

a. In general
b. Bond
c. Oath

a. In General

While a constable should qualify before entering on the performance of his duties, in the absence of statutory requirement there is no set period within which he must qualify in order to prevent the office from becoming vacant.

A constable should qualify before entering on the performance of his duties;[12] but in the absence of statutes providing for vacancy unless the constable qualifies within a prescribed time of election or appointment, there is no time limit within which one selected as constable must qualify in order to prevent a vacancy[13] Some statutes imposing such a time limit have been construed as mandatory,[14] but other statutes have been held to be merely directory.[15] Where, in addition to a statutory provision, the constitution provides that a neglect to qualify shall be deemed a refusal to accept the office, a neglect to take the oath of office within the time prescribed by statute must be treated as a refusal to accept the office.[16] Under a statute requiring a constable to qualify after he shall have been notified of his election, the notice contemplated means personal service.[17] The qualification of a constable should be noted by the proper officer in his book of record.[18]

b. Bond

(1) In general
(2) Form and sufficiency; amount
(3) Delivery
(4) Approval, filing, and recording
(5) Amendment; new or additional bond

(1) In General

Under statutes which so provide, a constable must execute a bond or enter into a recognizance for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office.

Under statutes which so provide, a constable must execute a bond or enter into a recognizance for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office.[19] The purpose of such statutes is to protect the town or district against the possible misfeasance or nonfeasance of constables in the exercise of their duties.[20] It has been held that a person elected to the office of constable may discharge its duties without having executed a qualifying bond if it has not been required of him or if its execution and delivery are delayed for the time being with the consent of the selectmen,[21] and that a statute providing for a forfeiture by the constable for every process he serves before giving bond does not mean that the bond must be approved before he may serve process without incurring a penalty.[22] The view has been taken that a constable's failure to file his official bond does not ipso facto work a forfeiture of office or effect a vacancy,[23] but merely makes the constable's title to office defeasible until forfeiture is pronounced in due form,[24] so that all acts of such officer prior to pronouncement of forfeiture are valid as to the public and third persons;[25] but it has also been held that if the constable fails to qualify and give bond there is in legal contemplation a vacancy in the office.[26]

A constable's bond is not void because it is not given until after he has commenced the discharge of his official duties[27] or until after the time allowed by statute in which to qualify.[28] A statute providing for the qualifying of a constable by filing his bond within a prescribed time after his election or appointment has been held to mean that the time is to be computed after the certificate of election has been issued.[29] Where the appointment of a constable is void, the bond taken under it is also void.[30] A constable's official bond is not vacated or rendered void by his temporary removal from office, but covers his official conduct after his reinstatement in office as well as before the suspension of his functions.[31] A bond, extorted from the constable and his sureties under color of office, but without lawful authority, as a condition precedent to his remaining in office, is void.[32]

(2) Form and Sufficiency; Amount

A constable's bond should substantially comply with statutory requirements regulating its form and sufficiency.

A bond taken in more than the amount prescribed by statute may be held valid, at least to the extent of the statutory sum.

While ordinarily a bond substantially complying in form to the requirements of the statute is sufficient,[33] a bond exacting conditions not prescribed has been held void.[34] A condition in a constable's bond that he shall execute all writs and process to him directed does not render the bond open to the exception that the condition is beyond the terms required by law, since only legally directed writs must be executed.[35] In the absence of a statutory requirement it is not necessary that a constable's bond should specify the township for which he was elected.[36] Where statute requires security but is silent as to its form, the security may be in the form of a penal bond to the people,[37] but it has been considered preferable that it should be in the form of a simple agreement, without any penalty, to pay to any person who may be aggrieved by the constable's neglect of duty.[38]

Obligee in bond. A constable's bond should name an obligee,[39] and the bond should run to the obligee designated by the statute,[40] but, although the bond names the wrong obligee, it is valid as a common-law bond when it is voluntarily executed and there is nothing in the condition contrary to law,[41] and a constable may justify his acts under his office, although his bond does not run to the proper obligee.[42] A statutory provision that a constable's bond shall be in trust for the benefit of all persons who may sustain injury and for like purposes and uses as sheriff's bonds does not constitute a condition of the bond, but does indicate that it is to cover not only breaches of his official duty to the commonwealth buth also injuries done to others.[43] Where the statute does not designate an obligee, the bond may run to the people of the state[44] or to "each and every person" to whom "the constable shall become liable"[45]

Amount. Although the penalty of a constable's bond is usually fixed by statute, a bond taken in more than the amount required by statute but not extorted colore officii is valid,[46] at least for the amount of the statutory penalty.[47] A bond not executed in pursuance of a statute and not conditioned for the payment of a certain sum of money is not good as a common-law bond.[48] Where the law does not fix any amount as the penalty, a bond in which a reasonable sum is fixed as the penalty is not invalid where not given as the result of extortion, duress, or any kind of unfairness;[49] on the other hand, no limitation of liability is necessary in order to make the bond valid.[50]

(3) Delivery

Ordinarily a constable's bond should be accepted by a duly authorized representative of the state or municipality in order to complete its delivery.

A constable's bond is not delivered so as to become effective unless it has been accepted by some authorized agent of the state or the municipality[51] or unless in law its acceptance can be presumed.[52] A city or town clerk is an officer to whom a constable may properly deliver his bond in the first instance, the statute not designating to whom such bond shall be delivered,[53] but it has also been considered that a delivery of the bond to the selectmen of the town would be sufficient.[54]

(4) Approval, Filing, and Recording

The bond of a constable should be approved and filed in compliance with statutory regulations.

When so required by statute, the bond of a constable must be approved by the official or tribunal designated by statute in order that it may become effective as a part of his qualification.[55] Where the statute provides that the clerk of court in vacation shall approve the bond, but does not designate a particular mode of approval, the receipt of, the indorsement on, and filing of, the bond by the clerk is sufficient evidence of his approval,[56] and, although the statute further provides that the court at the next term shall approve or reject the bond taken by the clerk in vacation, its failure to do so does not invalidate the bond.[57] Where the statute provides that a judge's certificate that the constable has given bond shall be sufficient evidence of such officer's right to act, such certificate executed in pursuance of the statute is sufficient evidence that the bond has been approved.[58]

In the absence of statutory direction to the contrary, the approval of the bond need not be made in writing,[59] or in open court,[60] or a matter of record.[61] A statute providing that the official bonds of all county and township officers shall be filed and recorded in the office of the county clerk has been held to include the official bond of a constable.[62]

(5) Amendment; New or Additional Bond

A constable's bond is subject to amendment in a proper case, and provision may be made for a new or additional bond in event of death, removal, or insolvency of the surety.

In a case where a constable's bond is in proper form, and recites his election, but by a clerical error the name of his surety is inserted in the condition, the court may grant, it has been held, a rule to amend the bond by substituting the name of the constable.[63]

New or additional bond. Statutes sometimes provide that in case of the death, removal, or insolvency of the sureties, or for other cause, the constable, at the risk of a vacancy in office, shall give new or additional security within a prescribed time. Where the statute provides that a county court may require a constable to show cause why a new bond should not be given, the statute must be followed,[64] and an order of the court not entered in pursuance of the statute is void.[65] Clerks of circuit courts may have authority to approve additional official bonds of constables[66]

c. Oath

In the absence of a statutory or constitutional provision directing otherwise, the qualifying oath of a constable may be oral.

In the absence of a statutory or constitutional provision directing otherwise, the qualifying oath required of a constable may be oral.[67] A constable who is reelected to office may lawfully continue to serve before he has been sworn in for the second term,[68] and a provision in a newly adopted constitution requiring all officers to take an oath before entering the duties of their office is inapplicable to a constable in office at the time of its adoption[69] A statute requiring county and township officers to file a copy of their official oath with the town clerk is not applicable, it has been held, to a constable.[70]

A statute declaring that any person shall be deemed to have refused to accept his office on his failure to take an oath within a prescribed time after he receives his commission or notice of appointment does not apply to constables where other statutory provisions specifically treat the time within which constables shall take the oath of office[71] An entry on the record of a town meeting that a certain candidate for the office of constable was "declared elected and sworn" sufficiently indicates that such person was sworn.[72]

§ 16. Term of Office, Holding Over, and Vacancies

a. Term of office
b. Holding over
c. Vacancies

a. Term of Office

The term of office of a constable is subject to statutory and constitutional regulation Where no constitutional prohibition exists the legislature may change the term as it sees fit.

As a general rule the term of office of a constable is fixed by constitutional or statutory provision,[73] and where it is so fixed, and a constable is duly elected, his term will be for the period set by statute even though the certificate of election erroneously specifies a different term.[74] The term of office ordinarily begins and ends at the time specified by constitutional or statutory provision,[75] and under some statutory provisions the term commences at the date of qualification, and not at the date of election[76]

Changing term of office. In accordance with general rules discussed in Officers § 47, the term of office of a constable can be altered by the legislature either where the office is not a constitutional one[77] or where the term is not fixed by the constitution creating the office,[78] but it cannot be altered by the legislature where it is fixed by constitutional provisions[79] Where the office of constable is not established by the constitution, the legislature may shorten the term of an incumbent,[80] extend the term of office of constable,[81] or discontinue the tenure.[82]

b. Holding Over

Under constitutional or statutory provisions a constable whose term expires may hold over until qualification of his successor.

Under constitutional or statutory provisions a constable may hold office until his successor shall be chosen and qualified,[83] but some constitutional provisions relative to holding over have been held inapplicable to the office of constable.[84] Notwithstanding a determination at an annual town meeting that the number of constables shall be three, the election of only two ousts all of the constables elected for the preceding year, and, although the number then chosen was three, no one of them can hold over on the pretense that no person is chosen in his place.[85] Where a constable at the close of his term turns over to a person holding a certificate of election the symbols of his office and accepts from such person an appointment as deputy, and takes the oath and thereafter acts as such, he thereby surrenders and abandons the office of constable, under principles discussed infra § 17, and cannot thereafter claim that he was holding over after his term.[86]

On abolition of office. Where there are two constables in a township having a certain population, and a statute is enacted providing that in townships of such population there shall be but one constable, the effect of such statute is to abolish the two previously existing offices and to create a new office which can be filled only by election or appointment, and consequently neither of the constables then in office is entitled to hold over after the expiration of his term.[87]

c. Vacancies

(1) In general
(2) Filling vacancies

(1) In General

Failure to appoint or elect a constable at the proper time, or the failure of a constable-elect to qualify, may result in the creation of a vacancy in the office.

A vacancy in the office of constable may occur when there is a failure to appoint or elect a constable or the constable-elect fails to qualify;[88] and a vacancy may also result from the constable's resignation, removal from office, suspension, or abandonment of the office, under principles discussed infra §§ 17, 18. Under a constitutional provision declaring that no person shall hold more than one lucrative office at the same time, an acceptance by a constable of the office of deputy sheriff ipso facto vacates the office.[89] The office of constable is not ipso facto vacated, it has been held, by the incumbent's going into military service as a conscript.[90]

Change of residence. While under some statutes requiring residence in the district as a prerequisite to the holding of the office the removal of a constable to another town with intent to remain there vacates his office,[91] under other statutes the mere fact that a constable removes his residence out of the voting district for which he was elected does not in itself create a vacancy in office.[92]

Power of court to declare vacancy. The power of a court to declare the office vacant depends on the authority given by constitutional or statutory provisions.[93] Where the court's only power is to require the constable to show cause why a new bond should not be given, the law must be strictly pursued,[94] and an order peremptorily requiring a new bond and thereafter declaring the office vacant without an order to show cause is absolutely void.[95]

(2) Filling Vacancies

In accordance with constitutional or statutory provisions, a vacancy in the office of constable may be filled by appointment or by election.

Unless there is a vacancy in the office of constable there can be no appointment[96] or election[97] for the purpose of filling a vacancy. Where a high constable is a borough officer as distinguished from a county or court officer, it has been held that the court of quarter sessions lacks authority to accept the bond or otherwise qualify one appointed to fill a vacancy in such office.[98]

By appointment. Under provisions of constitution or statute a vacancy in the office of constable may be filled in the first instance by an appointment by a designated officer or tribunal.[99] Under some statutes, on the failure to elect a constable because of the illegality of the election, there cannot be a new election, but the vacancy must be filled by appointment.[1] The statutory power given a county court by statute to appoint a constable to fill a vacancy has been held to be a special power,[2] and the statute must be followed.[3] An appointment by a court is void where the requisite number of justices required by statute is not present,[4] but the fact that the statute provides that the appointment shall be by the next county court does not prevent an appointment at a subsequent term if the requisite number of justices was not present at the preceding term.[5] Where, by statute, a justice of the peace under certain contingencies has the right to appoint a constable to fill a vacancy, the death of the justice in no way affects the appointment[6] Where there is no existing vacancy in the office at the time of a purported election of a constable, but a vacancy occurs thereafter, one appointed to fill such vacancy takes the office in preference to one elected to fill it at a time when the vacancy did not yet exist.[7]

The particular statute authorizing his appointment controls as to the term of office of a constable appointed to fill a vacancy.[8] Under some statutes one appointed to fill a vacancy in the elective office of constable holds such office until the next general election and the qualification of his successor,[9] but under other statutes the appointee holds for the unexpired term of his predecessor [10]

A statutory provision continuing a constable in office until a successor shall have been chosen and qualified has been applied in the case of a constable appointed to fill a vacancy [11] A statute providing that an appointee to fill a vacancy shall be qualified to act until the next election of constables has been held to mean not only until the election, but also until the successor qualifies [12] Under a statute providing that on the happening of a vacancy a certain board shall appoint a person to fill the vacancy until a successor is appointed and qualified, a constable who is elected his own successor, but who does not qualify, holds over until his successor is qualified [13]

By election. In accordance with statutory provisions, vacancies in the office of constable may be filled at a general or special election,[14] and the time for calling a special election may be committed to the discretion of a particular official.[15] Dependent on the provisions of the statute, a constable elected to fill a vacancy serves for the full term of constable provided by the constitution.[16] Under some statutes there can be no election for the purpose of filling a vacancy in the office of constable, but a vacancy can be filled by appointment only.[17]

§ 17. Resignation, Abandonment, Forfeiture, Suspension, or Removal

The resignation of a constable is not effective prior to acceptance, but by unequivocal acts he may abandon his office. Provision may be made for suspension of a constable for malfeasance in office or commission of a felony.

The resignation of a constable is not effective until accepted,[18] but he may abandon his office by unqualified acts indicating such intent.[19] If a constable is suffering from illness or other incapacity of a permanent character, instead of appointing a deputy he should resign so that a successor may be selected in his place.[20]

Suspension. In accordance with constitutional or statutory provisions, the power to suspend a constable for malfeasance may be exercised by a designated officer.[21] Under a statute providing that when any indictment shall be filed against a county or township officer for incompetency, corruption, gross immorality, criminal conduct amounting to a felony, malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance in office the officer may be suspended, the phrase "criminal conduct amounting to a felony" is applicable to personal acts not connected with the office of constable,[22] so that a constable may be suspended pending an indictment against him for murder,[23] but such statute has been held not to authorize a suspension for the violation of a statute prohibiting the transportation of intoxicating liquors from another state.[24] It has been held that on an affidavit stating that a constable has dismissed a peace warrant, and has received a certain sum for his services, he may be suspended from office without notice, and ruled to show cause why an attachment for contempt should not issue.[25]

§ 18. —— Removal and Proceedings Therefor

a. In general
b. Grounds
c. Proceedings

a. In General

Under constitution or statute designated officials or tribunals may have power to remove constables for cause

In accordance with constitutional or statutory provisions, a constable may be removed for cause by a designated official or tribunal,[26] and it has been held that even in the absence of such provisions, a county court authorized by the constitution to appoint a constable has the power to remove him for cause.[27] Where, under a city charter, constables form part of the city police force, they are within the protection of an act prohibiting the removal of police officers of cities except for cause and after trial,[28] but a constable who was not legally appointed cannot avail himself of the provisions of such an act.[29]

b. Grounds

A constable is subject to removal for the causes enumerated in the constitution or statutes.

A constable is subject to removal for the causes enumerated in the constitution and statutes.[30] A constable may be removed for misconduct while in the exercise of the duties of his office,[31] and a previous conviction of a misuser of office is not a necessary prerequisite.[32] Thus a constable may be removed for collecting an illegal fee[33] or for an abuse of process.[34] A constable may not be removed for failure to take certain action where such action is not a part of his official duties,[35] or, it has been held, for a violation of law in presenting "Official misconduct"

State, Tex.Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 244.

(2) Acts of constable in instructing his subordinates to keep prisoners in jail unless they wanted to plead guilty and to put any one in jail who came to jail to get any one out constituted "official misconduct" in form of "unlawful behavior in relation to duties of office," authorizing removal of constable from office, as against contention that acts were performed by constable in personal capacity, not in official capacity.—Jones v. a bill for services where he did actually render the services.[36]

The words "sufficient cause" in a statute providing for the removal of a constable should not be construed, it has been held, to embrace any cause not affecting the competency of the officer and his official conduct[37] Thus, under such statute, it has been held to constitute sufficient cause that the constable makes an illegal levy for the purpose of oppression;[38] but it is not sufficient cause that he was guilty of rudeness or incivility[39] or that he merely threatened to levy an execution in order to collect his fees in disregard of instructions of the creditor.[40]

c. Proceedings

In accordance with statutes or rules of practice, proceedings for the removal of a constable may be summary in nature, or they may consist of a hearing based on a filed accusation.

In accordance with statutes or rules of practice, proceedings for the removal of a constable may be summary in nature,[41] at least where the constable is an appointee of the court,[42] or the proceedings may consist of a hearing based on a filed accusation.[43] The common-law right of a court to strike an offending constable from its rolls summarily is not impaired by a statute prescribing removal proceedings by indictment.[44] Where constables form part of a city police force under a city charter, they are entitled to the protection of a statutory provision requiring a reasonable notice, a fair hearing, and an investigation of the charges on the removal of police officers.[45] In some jurisdictions the proceedings to remove a constable are said to be civil in their nature and not criminal.[46]

Pleading In a proceeding to remove a constable from office, the petition must state wherein the constable has neglected his duty.[47] An accusation alleging that a number of persons "willfully and unlawfully" disturbed the peace by fighting in the streets, and that defendant refused to prevent them, is sufficient under the statute although it does not allege that such persons "maliciously" disturbed the peace[48] On a rule on a constable to show cause why he should not be removed for extortion under color of his office, it is not necessary, it has been held, that there should be any specification of the particular facts relied on[49] Where an original petition charges generally that defendant constable is guilty of official misconduct and guilty of certain alleged misbehavior, the petition is not so defective that it cannot be perfected by proper amendments[50] In some jurisdictions, where a petition for a rule on a constable to show cause why he should not be removed from office sets forth an indictable offense, he is not required to answer under oath, since such answer might incriminate him[51]

Evidence. General rules apply to evidence in proceedings to remove a constable from office.[52]

Judgment or order. In a suit for removal of a constable, a temporary order of suspension is interlocutory and not to be regarded as a final judgment or decree of removal.[53]

Costs. A constable on judgment for his removal may be liable for the payment of costs,[54] and a constable who resigns his office pending a prosecution commenced for his removal is not thereby protected from payment of the costs[55] A provision requiring the presence of a majority of the justices of a county court to dismiss a constable from office does not apply to a judgment against the constable for costs.[56]

collaterally questioned,[57] and where one has received a commission as constable, and has qualified, his right to the office or his subsequent vacation of it can be determined only by a direct proceeding to which he is a party.[58] A person who is not entitled to the office of constable cannot maintain an action to prevent another from usurping the office.[59] Where defendant in replevin justifies as a constable, and his official character is directly put in issue, proof that he was an acting constable is insufficient, but he must show that he was a constable de jure.[60]

Evidence of title or incumbency. The records of a county court, showing several bonds, executed by a constable biennially, the last within one year of the time when the question arose, with proof that he was recognized as such by the county court, is sufficient proof that he was in office, without proof that he took the oaths or was allotted to a district;[61] and evidence that a certain person acted as constable and was generally reputed to be such is admissible in proof that he was a constable.[62]

§ 20. De Facto Constables

The acts of one serving under color of office, although he has not qualified as a constable de jure, may be valid as those of a constable de facto

The acts of one serving under color of office may be valid as those of a de facto constable, although he is not under bond,[63] as where he failed to renew his bond,[64] or did not furnish a bond within the time required by statute,[65] or his bond is defective,[66] or where he has ceased to be a resident of the county in which he holds his office,[67] or where the term of his appointment has expired.[68] Irrespective of whether a coroner of a county is prohibited from becoming a constable, where he does hold the office of constable after regular appointment he acts under color of authority and his acts are valid as those of a constable de facto if not de jure.[69] Where the statute provides for the appointment of one constable only in each township, a person appointed by the county court as additional constable in a township having one constable whose tenure is undisputed is not an officer de facto.[70]

C. DEPUTIES, ASSISTANTS, SUBSTITUTES, AND SPECIAL OFFICERS

§ 21. In General; Delegation of Powers

Ministerial duties of a sheriff, but not his judicial functions, may be delegated to a deputy or undersheriff.

While the ministerial duties of the office of sheriff may be delegated to a deputy or undersheriff,[71] who performs the duties delegated, not in his own name or right, but as the representative of the sheriff,[72] in the absence of statutory authority the judicial functions of the office may not be delegated.[73] Where a county freeholders' charter contains no limitation on the power of the legislature to give the sheriff additional deputies, and does not authorize the supervisors to make provision for the deputies, the right of providing for deputy sheriffs remains with the legislature.[74] Statutes providing that an undersheriff shall perform the duties of the sheriff during a vacancy in the office of the latter are not in conflict with other statutes providing that certain designated officials shall fill vacancies in county offices by appointment,[75] but

§ 22. Appointment

a. Deputy sheriff or undersheriff
b Deputy constable

a. Deputy Sheriff or Undersheriff

(1) In general
(2) Mode, time, and approval of appointment; filing and recording

(1) In General

Ordinarily a sheriff has the power under general common-law principles or under statutes to appoint deputies or assistants.

In the absence of constitutional or statutory restriction, a sheriff may appoint deputies and assistants under common-law principles,[77] and such right of appointment may be exercised under statutes so providing;[78] but the sheriff cannot delegate to another the power to appoint a deputy for him [79] A statute limiting the power of the sheriff to appoint deputies, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed.[80] A sheriff has no authority, it has been held, to appoint or detail a deputy to guard and watch railroad property except to prevent threatened injury.[81] A private citizen may be impressed into service by a sheriff to assist in the apprehension of a criminal [82] Under a statute making the sheriffs of the various counties in the state ex officio deputies of the sheriff of the supreme court, no special appointment of the deputies as such is necessary.[83] On due appointment and qualification a deputy sheriff becomes an officer de jure [84]

Appointment by board of supervisors. Where the statute provides for the appointment of deputies by the sheriff, a board of supervisors has no power to appoint.[85]

Appointment by district judge. Where a district judge has power to appoint deputies, or to authorize the sheriff to do so, such power is purely statutory,[86] and a district judge has no inherent power to appoint deputy sheriffs.[87]

Appointment by undersheriff. While an undersheriff may appoint a deputy or bailiff to do a particular act, under principles discussed infra § 29, he cannot, it has been held, appoint a deputy to do the general business of the office.[88]

Deputies for highway patrol and traffic duty. Under a statute authorizing the sheriff to appoint deputies he may appoint, where conditions warrant the appointment, deputies to patrol the highways of the county in motor vehicles,[89] and where the court under the constitution fixes the number of deputies the necessity for deputies for highway patrols is exclusively for such court [90] A statute authorizing sheriffs to appoint, with the approval of the county commissioners, a certain number of deputies in certain counties to patrol the county highways has been held not to be mandatory;[91] but under such statute the sheriff and county commissioners have the right to create a road patrol,[92] and the appointing power, direction, and control of the deputies are in the sheriff.[93] Statutes regulating the employment of traffic officers have been construed as contemplating that the sheriff shall observe reasonable recommendations of the county commissioners relative to appointment of deputies for employment as traffic officers,[94] and as contemplating that the traffic officers provided for shall be duly appointed and qualified deputy sheriffs employed by the county commissioners with the consent of the sheriffs.[95] Under some statutory provisions neither the sheriff nor the commissioners' court may act alone, but they must act in conjunction, in the selection of deputies as traffic officers.[96]

(2) Mode, Time, and Approval of Appointment, Filing and Recording

There should be a due compliance with constitutional and statutory regulations governing the mode of appointment of deputy sheriffs and the filing and recording of such appointment. Where required by statute, the approval of certain county officials or of the court is necessary.

While the constitutional and statutory provisions requiring the general appointment of a deputy to be in writing must be complied with,[97] in the absence of such provisions a general appointment of a deputy by a sheriff need not be in writing.[98] Where a written appointment is required, the fact that an appointment is signed by the sheriff as an individual and not as sheriff does not invalidate the appointment where it is otherwise in due form and properly filed.[99] Where a sheriff gives a deputy's badge to a person and authorizes him to arrest an offender, the appointment as deputy is general and not special, within a statute requiring appointments to do particular acts to be in writing.[1]

Time for appointment Under a statute authorizing the sheriff to appoint deputies he may appoint them at any time during the fiscal year for which they are allowed, without reference to whether the county board has provided for their compensation.[2]

Filing and recording. Statutes requiring that the appointment of a deputy sheriff be filed in the office of the county clerk have been held directory,[3] and an acting deputy may constitute a de facto officer notwithstanding the failure to file the appointment, as discussed infra § 28. The fact of filing in the clerk's office a warrant constituting a person deputy sheriff need not appear by an indorsement of the clerk thereon, but it may be proved by other evidence.[4]

Statutes providing that the appointment of a deputy is to be recorded in the office of the clerk have been held to be merely directory,[5] and prospective only in operation,[6] and hence inapplicable to a deputy in office at the time of passage.[7] After the commission is recorded according to statute it is notice to everyone of the fact of the appointment,[8] and the deputy may then withdraw the original without impairing the validity of his appointment.[9]

Approval of appointment. Although the sheriff is authorized to appoint his deputies for good cause, the court may refuse to approve the appointment,[10] but if such approval is withheld without proper cause mandamus will lie to compel the approval.[11] Constitutional and statutory provisions making the appointment by the sheriff subject to the approval of the county supervisors, the county court, or judge have been held to be purely prospective in operation.[12] The statutory requirement of approval by a board of commissioners[13] or judge[14] does not take away from the sheriff the power of appointment, but the appointment by the sheriff does not become effective or binding unless consented to by the proper authority.[15] Under a constitutional provision authorizing the county commissioners to empower the sheriff to appoint such deputies as the business of the office requires, before the commissioners are authorized to empower the appointment of a deputy they must find that the business of the office requires the assistance of one.[16] A statute authorizing the sheriff with the written consent of a probate judge to employ a temporary guard for the protection of the county jail or for the safekeeping of prisoners has reference to temporary and emergency cases where it is necessary to protect the jail or the inmates thereof[17] and cannot be extended into a general authority to employ regular or permanent deputies.[18] One who has been appointed deputy sheriff without authority of the county commissioners, and who presents a bill for his services, must show the circumstances of his appointment and the emergency existing which required immediate action on the part of the sheriff, and that the latter was so necessarily engaged that he could not perform the service and had no other assistant.[19]

Where the appointment is subject to the approval of a board of supervisors which is compelled by law to keep its orders and decisions in a minute book, the failure of the minute book to show an approval of the appointment of an alleged deputy sheriff, and the absence from the files in the auditor's office of any written appointment of such deputy sheriff, constitute at least prima facie evidence that the appointment was never made or approved.[20]

b. Deputy Constable

A constable may, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, act by a deputy in the performance of particular matters. Compliance with statutory requirements as to the mode of appointment is necessary.

Since the functions and duties of a constable are wholly ministerial,[21] he may, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, act by deputy,[22] at least for the execution of a particular duty, as discussed infra § 29; but according to some authorities his power in this respect is limited to delegating his authority to and acting by a deputy with respect to particular acts which he is for some reason unable to perform in person,[23] and he cannot appoint a permanent deputy for the general discharge of the duties of his office.[24] Under some statutes it has been held that a constable has no power to appoint a deputy in any case.[25] A statute allowing a constable a certain number of deputies does not require that he appoint such deputies,[26] and the fact that one of the appointees of the constable shall be the humane officer does not mean the agent of the humane society shall be ex officio a deputy constable.[27] Where provision is made for appointment of deputy constables, there should be a compliance with statutory requirements as to mode of appointment.[28]

Filing. Statutes requiring that the appointment of a deputy constable be filed in the office of the clerk have been held directory.[29]

Approval Under some statutes approval of the appointment by the court is essential.[30] An appointment subject to the approval of a county court makes the appointment conditional and the approval of the court a condition precedent to its validity.[31] A county commissioners' court may assist in appointment of a deputy constable only in the manner prescribed by statute.[32]

§ 23. Number of Deputies

The number of deputies to be appointed by a sheriff or constable may be limited by statute or by a court or official body acting under authority of constitutional or statutory provisions.

The number of deputies to be appointed by a sheriff or constable may be fixed or limited by statute or by a court or official body acting under authority of statute.[33] Constitutional provisions to the effect that the number of deputy sheriffs and assistants shall be determined by rule of court are mandatory.[34] Statutes authorizing the sheriff to appoint one or more deputies not exceeding the number allowed by rule of court constitute a limitation on the sheriff's power of appointment,[35] under which he may in his discretion appoint less than the number allowed by rule,[36] but may not appoint more.[37] Some statutes have been held to be merely directory.[38] Under some statutory provisions a sheriff may appoint additional deputies as required in emergencies,[39] but not otherwise.[40] A statute providing that, if the judges of a court deem the attendance of an additional number of constables desirable or necessary, they may authorize the sheriff to summon "such additional constables" has been held to authorize the judges to require the sheriff to summon as constables such persons as they select, and not to limit their power to determining the necessity for constables and the number to be summoned.[41]

Where the number of deputies is not limited by law, the rule is that it is the duty of the sheriff to have a sufficient number of deputies to execute the mandates of the court within the time prescribed by law.[42] The number of deputy constables appointed should not be so great as to deprive the elected constables of the honors and functions of their offices.[43]

Under statutes which so provide, a deputy sheriff or deputy constable must be a qualified elector or a resident of the county in order to be eligible to hold the office.

Under some statutes a deputy sheriff must be a qualified elector,[44] and, where the statute requires the sheriff to be a qualified elector and empowers him to appoint deputies for whose acts he shall be liable, the deputy must also be a qualified elector.[45] Under statutory provisions requiring the sheriff to be a resident of the county and providing that he may appoint deputies who shall possess the power and perform the duties of the office of sheriff in the absence of the sheriff or during a vacancy in the office, the sheriff may not appoint a person a deputy sheriff for a county other than that in which he resides;[46] but, where the statute does not expressly require a deputy sheriff to be a resident of the state or county, it has also been held that such residence is not necessary,[47] notwithstanding the sheriff authorized by statute to appoint deputies to aid in the enforcement of law must be an elector of the county.[48] Where the constable is allowed a deputy because he cannot attend to the duties of the office, the person deputized must be a resident of the same ward or township with the constable who deputizes him.[49]

Character, conviction of crime. The fact that a person was previously of bad moral character does not authorize the county court to refuse to approve his appointment as deputy sheriff where a complete reformation is shown.[50] A deputy sheriff may not

§ 25. Qualification

a In general
b. Bond

a. In General

A deputy sheriff should qualify in accordance with the provisions of the constitution and statutes.

A deputy sheriff should qualify in accordance with the provisions of the constitution and statutes,[53] and in some jurisdictions such provisions are said to be mandatory.[54] Where a deputy sheriff duly qualifies for the office he becomes a deputy sheriff de jure,[55] but, if the deputy acts as such without qualifying, he may be considered a de facto officer under principles considered infra § 28.

Oath. A deputy sheriff must take the oath of office required by statute,[56] but, in the absence of a statutory requirement, an oath is not necessary.[57] Although the statute requires a written oath, the official acts of a deputy sheriff are valid under a verbal oath where the statute so provides and there is no statute specially declaring the act invalid.[58] A requirement that the oath be filed in the office of the county clerk has been held directory,[59] and, although he fails so to file his oath, an acting deputy may nevertheless constitute a de facto officer under principles discussed infra § 28. Mandamus is a proper remedy to compel the court to administer the oath to a person appointed a deputy sheriff.[60]

b. Bond

In accordance with constitutional or statutory provisions, a deputy sheriff may be required to give bond for the faithful performance of the duties of his office.

In accordance with constitutional or statutory provisions, a deputy sheriff may be required to give bond to his principal or to the state or county for the faithful performance of the duties of his office.[61] Even in the absence of such provisions, it is not unreasonable to permit a sheriff to take security for his indemnity against any violation of the duties of the office by the deputy.[62] The bond of indemnity given the sheriff by his deputy has been held to be the property of the sheriff,[63] and distinct and different from the official bond given to the county by the sheriff.[64] Where the condition counts on and refers to a deputation already made for a limited term, the bond operates for such term and no longer,[65] although the deputy continues in office after the expiration of such term.[66] The validity of a deputy sheriff's bond is not affected by the fact that he did not take the oath of office,[67] or that, through inadvertence, the proper record of his qualifications was not made by the court at the time of his appointment.[68]

Form and sufficiency. Where the statute prescribes no condition for violation of which the deputy and his surety would become liable, the bond in any event should be conditioned on the faithful discharge of the duties of his office,[69] and, where the premium for a deputy's bond is paid from public funds, the courts will read into it the statutory covenant for faithful discharge of official duties.[70] Unless the condition of the bond is contrary to public policy, it will be upheld, although there may be irregularities.[71] In the absence of a statutory form,

Permission to sheriff

Under statute providing that sheriff "may" take such bond from his deputy as he shall deem necessary, the giving of bond by deputy is not "mandatory," since the permission to require bond is for the sheriff's protection if he deems it necessary.—Trammel v. a deputy sheriff's bond conditioned to perform "the duties of the said office as deputy sheriff" is sufficient whether or not the deputy sheriff is considered as an officer.[72] Where the statute provides that all official bonds of county officers must be made payable to the county in which the officer is elected or appointed, and that deputies shall give bonds in the same manner and for the same sum as their principals, the bond of a deputy sheriff must be for the same amount as his principal's, and must run to the county, and not to his principal.[73]

Delivery and approval. A deputy sheriff's bond is operative only from the time of its delivery.[74] Where the statute does not require the indemnity bond of a deputy sheriff to be approved, he is not guilty of a misdemeanor for performing official acts without the approval of the bond under a statute making public officers guilty of a misdemeanor under such circumstances.[75] Where the statute provides that the bond of a deputy sheriff, payable to the governor, shall be approved by the county commissioners before he shall be allowed to perform any service as such deputy, a deputy sheriff cannot lawfully act without such approval.[76]

Sale of public office Since contracts for the sale of public offices ordinarily are considered void, as discussed in Contracts § 219 b, a bond containing, besides the usual indemnity conditions, a condition to pay the sheriff a certain sum of money is void,[77] unless such a bond is declared valid by statute notwithstanding the sale of the office,[78] but in order to invalidate the bond such consideration must appear from the face of the bond or be pleaded specially.[79] Where the sheriff is entitled to the fees of the office, a bond, wherein the sheriff at the time of the appointment reserves a part of the fees, is not void as in violation of the statute prohibiting the sale of offices.[80] An indemnity bond executed after the illegal sale of the office and after the deputy has been qualified has been held valid.[81]

§ 26. Term of Office; Resignation and Removal

a. In general
b. Removal of deputy

a. In General

Where the term of a deputy sheriff or deputy constable is not otherwise fixed by statute, he holds office during the term and at the pleasure of the sheriff or constable who appointed him.

In accordance with the rules governing tenure of deputies generally, as discussed in Officers § 149, where the term of a deputy sheriff or deputy constable is not fixed by statute, he serves at the pleasure of the sheriff or constable who appointed him,[82] and his deputation expires with the office on which it depends.[83] A sheriff lacks power to extend the term of his undersheriff beyond the period of his own term,[84] or by contract to bind himself to keep his deputy in office for a specified period.[85] If the sheriff is reëlected, a new appointment is necessary to continue the deputy in office.[86]

Discharge before expiration of term

The fact that deputy sheriff's contract of employment with sheriff provided that deputy's employment would continue until expiration of sheriff's term of office did not preclude sheriff from discharging deputy prior to expiration of term —Murray v. Harris, supra.

A deputy appointed by sheriff is charged with knowledge of statute providing that deputies should continue in office during sheriff's pleasure, and deputy accepts precarious tenure, regardless of contrary provisions in his contract of employment —Murray v. Harris, supra.

86. Ark.—Greenwood v. State, 17 Ark. 332.
Tex —Trinkle v State, 127 S W. 1060, 59 Tex Cr 257.

At common law the office and functions of a deputy terminate ipso facto when the sheriff goes out of office,[87] as when the sheriff dies,[88] resigns,[89] or is removed,[90] or is duly succeeded by another sheriff,[91] or if his term expires under such circumstances that he is not entitled to hold over,[92] but under statute in some jurisdictions the status and duty to discharge the functions of the office by a deputy or undersheriff continue until a new sheriff is selected and qualifies.[93] The status of an undersheriff on the death of the sheriff to execute the duties of the sheriff as prescribed by statute continues only until the vacancy is filled by election or appointment.[94]

Absconding of sheriff does not deprive his deputy of power to act, but the latter may discharge the duties of the office until the office is declared vacant by a court of competent jurisdiction or an election is held and a successor to the sheriff is elected and qualified.[95]

Resignation of deputy. A deputy sheriff may resign his office under a statute permitting the resignation of officers to the authority which appoints them,[96] and to be effective the deputy's resignation must be made to the officer designated by statute.[97] The act of resignation is the act of the deputy,[98] and, when he resigns, the office becomes vacant under a statute declaring an office vacant on the resignation of the incumbent.[99] In the absence of statutory requirement, the resignation need not be under seal.[1]

b. Removal of Deputy

As a general rule, unless otherwise provided by statute, the power of removal or suspension of a deputy sheriff or constable is vested in the appointing agency.

As a general rule, unless otherwise provided by statute, the power of removal or suspension of a deputy sheriff or constable is vested in the appointing agency.[2] Under a statute providing that the sheriff may appoint his deputies with the consent of a board of county commissioners or a judge, the appointing power remains in the sheriff, as discussed supra § 22, so that the sheriff,[3] and not the board of commissioners,[4] or a judge, has the power to remove the deputies summarily.[5]

Utah.—Sheriff Salt Lake County v. Salt Lake County, 268 P. 783, 71 Utah 593.

5. Minn.—State v. McIntyre, 25 Minn. 383.

Under the general rules discussed in Officers § 62, where a deputy or undersheriff comes within the protection of civil service statutes, he may not be dismissed arbitrarily, but is protected by the civil service laws as a minor public officer.[6] On the other hand, where the statutes are construed as not including deputy or undersheriffs within the protection of civil service, such officer is regarded as a mere sheriff's appointee without tenure of office,[7] removable at the will of the appointing power,[8] and, having accepted appointment and pay on the theory that he is not covered by the statute, a deputy may not claim permanency of position or avoid removal at the pleasure of the appointing sheriff.[9] In accordance with statutory provisions it has been held that a chief deputy may succeed to the office of sheriff during a vacancy pending election of a new sheriff without losing his civil service status as chief deputy where he does not thereafter offer himself as a candidate in the election.[10]

Grounds. Under statutes authorizing a sheriff to remove deputies at his pleasure, and further providing that the circuit court shall have power to remove such deputies whenever in its opinion such removal will subserve the public interest, it is implicit under the latter provision that there must be some cause or ground for removal of a deputy by the court,[11] and that such cause must be a fact affecting adversely the service that the deputy renders the public and the court.[12] Under some statutes a deputy constable may be removed for any cause deemed sufficient by the constable.[13]

Manner of removal; proceedings. Under a statute providing that the term of office of a deputy sheriff shall expire with the term of the sheriff unless sooner removed, a sheriff has the right summarily to remove the deputy,[14] notwithstanding the statute further provides that such deputy shall be removed on complaint of certain officers that the deputy is not discharging his duties satisfactorily.[15] While it is very proper that the removal should be in writing and on notification to the displaced deputy,[16] a seal is not necessary.[17] Under some statutory provisions, the sheriff and the commissioners' court must act in conjunction in the discharge of a deputy.[18] Where a deputy sheriff or constable may be removed only for cause, he has a right to notice[19] and an opportunity to be heard.[20] While the charge may be made by the circuit judge where the circuit court is vested with the power of removal,[21] it has been held more appropriate for the charges to be brought by the prosecuting officials,[22] and to let such charges be heard by the trial judge.[23] If the charges are upheld and removal is ordered, an appeal can be granted,[24] with or without supersedeas in the discretion of the presiding judge.[25]

Vacation of appointment. Where statute requires residence in the ward or district as an element of eligibility, nonresidence is ground for vacation of the appointment of a deputy constable,[26] and the rule that a judge is without power to set aside a judgment after the term is inapplicable to his vacation of such appointment.[27]

§ 27. Title to, and Possession of, Office

The title of a deputy sheriff to his office or the validity of his appointment may not be attacked collaterally. One who has acted as deputy sheriff is estopped to deny that he was such.

The title of a deputy sheriff to his office or the validity of his appointment may not be attacked collaterally.[28]

Evidence of official character. As a general rule evidence that a person acted as deputy sheriff or constable and was reputed to be and recognized as such is admissible and sufficient to prove his official character,[29] but, where one seeks to justify as a deputy sheriff, proof that he acted as such is not sufficient to establish his official character.[30] Where a deputy sheriff has taken a forthcoming bond, and returned it forfeited, it is not sufficient evidence of his legal incapacity to do so that the clerk of the probate court had twice searched the records of his office unsuccessfully to find the record of his appointment as deputy sheriff, and believed it did not exist in that office, it being proved that the office has been kept carelessly by his predecessor, and there being other evidence besides the taking and returning of the bond that the deputy had served in that capacity[31] In passing on a deputy sheriff's claim for services, the deputy's affidavit that he is such, his commission, and proof of his oath of office establish a prima facie de jure title to the office, behind which the town board of auditors cannot go.[32]

In an action against a sheriff for the default or misconduct of a person alleged to have been his deputy the fact that the sheriff appointed such person his deputy,[33] or an admission by the sheriff that such person was his deputy,[34] is sufficient proof of the deputation; but the return of the person alleged to have been a deputy is not sufficient proof that he was such.[35] Declarations of a person performing the duties of an undersheriff that he was such undersheriff and had charge of all the business, made while transacting no business incident to such position or connected with its duties, are inadmissible to prove the authority conferred on him by the sheriff.[36] The records of the county clerk showing the approval of the appointment of a deputy sheriff by the county commissioners is some evidence of the appointment sufficient to make the question an issue of fact for the court or jury.[37]

Estoppel to deny title or incumbency. One who has acted as deputy sheriff is estopped to deny that he was such,[38] and a person ruled in the superior court as a deputy of the county to show cause why he had not collected the amount of an execution levied by him cannot raise the question of his official character after he has answered the rule and a verdict has been rendered against him on a traverse of his answer.[39]

§ 28. De Facto Deputies

One who is actually acting as deputy sheriff or constable under color of right is such officer de facto, although the statutory requisites of appointment have not been complied with, or he is ineligible or has failed to take the requisite oath or to give the requisite bond.

One who is actually acting as a deputy sheriff or constable under color of right is such officer de facto,[40] although the statutory requisites of appointment have not been complied with, as where the appointment is not in writing,[41] or not under seal,[42] filed,[43] or confirmed by the judge of a particular court,[44] or where the appointment contains limitations which are void.[45] Likewise, one acting as deputy is a de facto officer notwithstanding he is ineligible,[46] or has failed to take,[47] or file,[48] the requisite oath, or has failed to give,[49] or sign[50] the necessary bond. Where one who was appointed a deputy sheriff refused to take the oath and cut the same from his appointment, and there was no showing that he exercised the duties of the office, or had the reputation in the community of being a deputy sheriff, it was held that he was not an officer de facto.[51]

§ 29. Special Deputies and Persons Specially Authorized

a. Functions of sheriff
b. Functions of constable

a. Functions of Sheriff

Ordinarily a sheriff is empowered to appoint persons to perform particular functions of his office, such appointees being regarded as special, rather than general, deputies.

When authorized by law to do so, a sheriff may appoint persons to do particular acts falling within the functions of the sheriff,[52] such as to serve a particular process,[53] or to make an arrest, as discussed in Arrest § 4 b (1), or to preserve the peace.[54] The power of appointment by the sheriff under a statute providing that any person may be deputed by the sheriff to perform particular acts is not abrogated by a statute leaving the necessity of employment and compensation to a board of supervisors,[55] and under such statute the sheriff may appoint a deputy to act as quarantine inspector.[56] Where a special deputy sheriff has been appointed to execute a writ, it will be presumed that an "urgent occasion" existed to authorize the appointment.[57]

A special deputy is said to be the mere agent of the sheriff in each particular case and not a public officer,[58] and the sheriff may appoint a minor as his special deputy to perform a particular act.[59] The phrase "special and non-pay," as applied to a deputy sheriff, has been held to imply that, while he holds a commission as deputy sheriff, his activities in that respect are limited to performing acts specifically directed, and that he is under no obligation to devote time to investigating criminal offenses.[60] Where a private citizen is impressed into service by a peace officer, a contract of employment results.[61]

Appointment by person other than sheriff. The sheriff cannot delegate, it has been held, to an attorney of a plaintiff in attachment the power to appoint a special deputy to make a levy.[62] While a deputy or undersheriff may not appoint another for the purpose of conducting the general business of the office, as discussed supra § 22 a, he may appoint a bailiff or special deputy to do a particular act.[63] Under statutory provisions authorizing the sheriff to appoint general deputies who shall perform the duties of the sheriff, a deputy sheriff has the same power to appoint a special deputy to serve a summons as is given by statute to the sheriff.[64]

Mode of appointment. Even in the absence of a statute requiring it, it has been held that a written appointment is necessary to authorize a special deputy to do a particular act,[65] such as to serve a writ of ne exeat,[66] or to make an arrest,[67] or to sell property under execution.[68] A statute requiring an indorsement on a summons must be complied with,[69] but in the absence of statute the appointment need not be indorsed on a summons[70] or on a writ of venire.[71] Statutes requiring the appointment of a special deputy to be in writing must be complied with;[72] but the delivery of a deputy sheriff's badge has been held a sufficient compliance.[73] Where a sheriff gives a deputy's badge to a person and authorizes him to arrest an offender, the appointment is a general, and not a special, deputation within a statute requiring appointments to do particular acts to be in writing.[74] Where goods in the hands of a third person who claims a lien thereon are attached by a sheriff and placed in the charge of the deputy sheriff, the lienor is not the custodian of the goods under the sheriff's authority.[75]

Filing of appointment. In the absence of statute it is not necessary to file the appointment of a special deputy in a clerk's office,[76] or with the papers in a cause.[77] A statute providing that the appointment of an undersheriff be filed has been held inapplicable to a special deputy.[78]

Oath. In the absence of statutory requirement, an oath need not be taken by a special deputy.[79] A statute providing that an undersheriff shall take an oath of office has been held inapplicable to a special deputy.[80]

b. Functions of Constable

(1) In general
(2) Mode of appointment
(3) Oath and bond; evidence of appointment

(1) In General

A constable may appoint special deputies for the performance of particular functions of his office, and a justice of the peace may likewise possess power to appoint special constables.

While a constable ordinarily may not appoint a permanent deputy, as discussed supra § 22 b, at common law under certain circumstances he may appoint persons as special constables to do particular acts,[81] such as to serve a summons[82] or writ of execution.[83] Where there are statutes governing appointment of special deputy constables, an appointment not authorized by the statute has been held void.[84] Where a landlord's warrant is directed to a constable, naming him, "or next constable," the constable named may legally deputize or appoint a person, not a constable, to make distress thereunder.[85]

Appointment by justice of the peace. Under statutory authorization, a justice of the peace may appoint special constables for particular purposes.[86] Where the statute authorizes a justice to appoint a constable for a special purpose when the pressure of official business demands it, an appointment under such circumstances is properly made,[87] and it is not material whether the appointee is denominated a constable or a special constable.[88] The appointment must be in strict, if not literal, compliance with the statute,[89] and the justice may not appoint special constables for specific purposes not included within those enumerated in the statute.[90] Under a statute authorizing generally the appointment of a special constable by the justice whenever a qualified constable cannot conveniently be found in the township, it must appear that some legal right is subject to jeopardy or that some substantial harm will come to a litigant before a regular officer can be found to serve the process;[91] but, if the justice has personal knowledge that there is no regular constable at his command to serve process, it is not necessary that any showing be made to him before he appoints a special constable.[92]

The phrase "special purposes," as used in statutes authorizing a justice of the peace to appoint a constable for special purposes, has been construed as meaning for the purposes of certain cases then pending before the appointing justice, when the conditions specified in the statute prevail.[93] Under some statutes it is necessary that a party to the suit make and file an affidavit with the magistrate that there is no constable at hand and the business is urgent;[94] and whether an "emergency" under the terms of a statute exists authorizing the appointment of a special constable by the justice is a question of which the justice is the exclusive judge.[95]

Under statutory provisions giving a justice of the peace authority when the office of constable is vacant or in other case of emergency to appoint a person to act as constable, when the office is vacant and an emergency also exists, there may be an appointment of two or more special constables.[96]

Appointment by commissioner. One appointed and commissioned under statutory and charter provisions as a special police officer by the commissioner of public safety of a city at the request of a justice of the peace, to serve process issued out of the justice's court, has been held to have the status of a constable at common law.[97]

(2) Mode of Appointment

An appointment of a special deputy constable should be made in compliance with the mode prescribed by statute.

Where the statute designates the manner in which a special constable shall be appointed, the appointment must be in strict conformity therewith or it will be void.[98] Where the statute authorizes an appointment by a justice to serve a writ of attachment, as discussed in Justices of the Peace § 77, or garnishment, as considered in Justices of the Peace § 78, in case of an emergency without designating the mode of appointment, it need not be in writing.[99]

Indorsement on process. Where the statute authorizing the appointment of a special constable to serve process requires that the appointment by the justice shall be made by a written indorsement under seal on the back of the process which the person receiving it shall be deputed to execute, an indorsement under seal is necessary, although the justice's court is not a court of record having a seal,[1] and, while an indorsement on a separate piece of paper has been held insufficient,[2] an indorsement under seal on a separate piece of paper securely fastened to, and on the back of, the writ before delivery to the appointee is sufficient as a substantial compliance with the statute.[3]

(3) Oath and Bond; Evidence of Appointment

A special constable need not take an oath of office or furnish a bond unless he is required or directed to do so by statute or by the appointing justice. There is no presumption of the validity of the appointment, and a person who justifies under the appointment must show affirmatively that the statutory causes justifying the appointment existed.

In the absence of a statutory requirement, a constable appointed by a justice for a special purpose need not take an oath,[4] unless directed to do so by the appointing justice.[5] In like manner, in the absence of a statutory requirement, a constable appointed by a justice for a special purpose need not give a bond,[6] but the justice himself may require a bond.[7] While a bond may be required by statute from a special constable in the performance of certain acts, a statute requiring a bond where the appointment is to serve an attachment, execution, or order for the delivery of property does not apply where the appointment is to serve a search warrant.[8] A statute requiring all civil officers to give bond has been held inapplicable to a special constable appointed by a justice to serve a search warrant.[9]

Evidence of appointment. Where the statute authorizes an appointment of a special constable under certain circumstances to serve process, there is no presumption of the validity of the appointment,[10] and a person who justifies under such appointment must show affirmatively that the statutory causes authorizing the appointment existed,[11] and that the appointment was made in the manner prescribed by statute.[12] Where the statute requires the appointment of a special constable by a justice of the peace to be noted on the docket of such justice, the appointment can be proved only by the record.[13]

§ 30. Bailiffs, Keepers, Clerks, and Other Assistants and Employees

a. Bailiffs
b. Clerks and other employees

a. Bailiffs

Where the sheriff lacks time to attend sessions of court, he should appoint deputies or bailiffs to do so for him. A special oath may be required of a special deputy acting as bailiff, and, where he serves during a term of court under color of appointment, he is at least a bailiff de facto.

It is the duty of the sheriff, when he cannot attend to such duties in person, to appoint deputies to attend on the terms of court,[14] and, when such deputies are put in charge of juries, the term "bailiff" is applied to them.[15] The term "bailiff" is also used, however, as meaning a sheriff's officer or deputy generally.[16] Under a statute providing that the sheriff shall summon bailiffs to serve in court in cases tried by a jury when the judge certifies that such bailiffs are necessary, the employment of a bailiff is left to the discretion of the court.[17] Where the statute authorizes the sheriff to employ as many bailiffs as may be necessary, an order of court limiting the number is unauthorized.[18]

While no special oath is required of the sheriff when he acts as bailiff to the jury, under principles discussed supra § 7, when the duty of acting as bailiff is assigned by the sheriff to a deputy specially appointed for that purpose alone, a special oath is necessary to be administered to him.[19]

Evidence of appointment. It is not necessary, it has been held, that the appointment of a constable as bailiff to serve during a term of court be shown by the minutes of the court, and, when not so shown, the fact can be proved by other evidence.[20]

De facto bailiff. A constable selected by the sheriff to serve as bailiff during a term of court, and who serves in such capacity, and is presumably sworn, is at least a de facto officer whose acts are valid.[21]

b. Clerks and Other Employees

In accordance with statutory authorization the sheriff may appoint his own clerks and assistants who retain their positions at his pleasure but not beyond his term.

In accordance with statutory authorization, the sheriff may appoint the employees and assistants in his office.[22] A deputy sheriff, by adopting the act of his clerk in signing the sheriff's and the deputy sheriff's names to a certificate of attachment, makes it to all intents and purposes the act of the deputy.[23] An appointment by a sheriff to a position as clerk in his office cannot extend beyond his own term,[24] and such clerk may be dismissed by the sheriff at any time,[25] and it has been said that both under the rules of the common law and the statute law sheriffs are not restricted in their right to discharge their employees.[26]

Number of clerks. Under the statutory practice prevailing in some counties it rests with a salary board and not alone with the sheriff to determine the number of assistants and clerks necessary properly to transact the business in the sheriff's office.[27]

§ 31. Substitutes for Sheriff

Under some statutes private persons may be appointed to perform particular services where there is no sheriff or the sheriff is unavailable.

Under some statutes special appointments of persons to perform particular services appertaining to the sheriff's office may be made if there is no sheriff or the sheriff is unable to act, and the coroner is unable to fulfill his duties.[28] A statute providing that a private person may be appointed to serve process where the sheriff is disqualified and the coroner is unable to act does not authorize an appointment of a private person to act as sheriff during the trial of a case in which the sheriff is a party.[29] Where a sheriff is in his office ready to serve process issued by the probate judge, and the sheriff's office is in the same building with that of the probate judge, the latter has no authority to appoint a special sheriff to serve the process.[30]

§ 32. —— Coroner Acting as Sheriff

Under the common law or under provisions of constitutions or statutes which expressly confer the right, a coroner may act in his ministerial capacity as a substitute for the sheriff where the latter is unavailable or is disqualified.

Under the common law or under provisions of constitutions or statutes which expressly confer the right, a coroner may act in his ministerial capacity as a substitute for the sheriff when the latter is unavailable or is disqualified.[31] On the occurrence of a vacancy in the office of sheriff it has been held that, if there is no undersheriff, the coroner may discharge the duties of the sheriff's office,[32] but there is other authority which holds that the coroner is merely the substitute for the sheriff and has no authority to act in that capacity when there is no sheriff in office.[33] Where the right is expressly conferred by statute, a coroner cannot exercise the powers and perform the duties of the sheriff under circumstances not specified in the statute.[34] Under a statute providing that in case of a vacancy in the office of sheriff the powers and duties shall devolve on the coroner to be executed by him until a new sheriff is appointed or elected, it has been said that strictly speaking there is no vacancy in the office by reason of the death, removal, or resignation of the incumbent,[35] but under other statutes a vacancy exists in the office of sheriff whenever the person elected or appointed ceases for any reason to be sheriff, although the duties may for the time being be performed by a coroner acting as sheriff.[36]

While acting in discharge of the duties of the sheriff, the coroner is still regarded as such and not as a true sheriff.[37] Under constitutional provisions to the effect that, if there is a vacancy in the office of sheriff, the coroner shall perform the duties pertaining to such office until the vacancy is filled, the coroner does not in case of vacancy succeed to the office or become sheriff,[38] but merely performs duties pertaining strictly to the office of sheriff until filling of the vacancy,[39] and on the filling of the vacancy by appointment by the governor the coroner has no color of title to the office of sheriff.[40] Under a statute providing that in case of a vacancy in the office of sheriff the powers and duties devolve on the coroner until a new sheriff is appointed or elected, the coroner holds office only until an appointment authorized by statute is made by the court.[41]

Rights of coroner or deputies to perform duties. Under a statute providing that, if for any cause there is a vacancy in the sheriff's office, and there is no deputy to act as authorized by law in case of the death of the sheriff, the coroner shall perform the duties of sheriff, as construed in connection with a statute providing that the deputy may continue to discharge the duties of any state or county officer on the latter's death, the deputy of a sheriff discharges the duties of a sheriff only on his death,[42] so that, if the sheriff is living and disqualified, the coroner, and not the deputy, is the proper officer to assume the duties.[43] Where a sheriff does not die, an undersheriff cannot execute the duties of the office of sheriff under a statute providing that he shall execute such duties on the death of the sheriff,[44] but on a vacancy caused by the election of the sheriff to another office, the duties devolve on the coroner.[45] Where the coroner is authorized by statute to summon jurors, his authority to do so is not abrogated by a statute authorizing the appointment by the sheriff of a deputy to execute and make returns of all writs and other processes directed to the sheriff, and to perform all other duties incumbent on the sheriff.[46]

Rights of coroner against hold-over sheriff. While the sheriff is generally entitled to hold over until his successor is elected and qualified, under principles discussed supra § 8, it has been held that on the death of a sheriff-elect before qualifying, the coroner-elect, after qualification, is entitled to the office of sheriff as against the former sheriff claiming to hold over.[47]

Where neither sheriff nor coroner can act in the performance of functions of the sheriff's office, the emergency may in a proper case be met by appointment of a special officer called an "elisor," to perform the required duties.

An "elisor" may be defined as a person appointed to perform certain duties pertaining to certain officers, when the latter are disqualified;[48] a person appointed by the court to return a jury when the sheriff and coroner have been challenged as incompetent.[49] Where neither the sheriff nor the coroner can act, such emergency is met by appointment of a special officer, called an "elisor," to perform the required duties.[50] In accordance with statutory provisions appointment of an elisor has been held proper where both the sheriff and coroner are disqualified,[51] or where the office of sheriff is vacant and the coroner is disqualified to act,[52] but, where the statute requires the inability of both the sheriff and coroner to act, an appointment of an elisor is erroneous when no showing is made that the coroner as such is disqualified,[53] and this is true, even though such appointee is the coroner.[54] Where an elisor has been appointed, the presumption is that the circumstances authorizing such appointment existed.[55] Strict compliance with the statutory procedure, as by failing to show the disqualification of the coroner, is subject to waiver.[56] Where there is no effort to show actual disqualification of the marshal and the coroner, but the claim is merely that the marshal and his deputies have been unable to find and serve defendant, there is no authorization for appointment of an elisor to serve writs either at common law or under court rule.[57]

Residence. It is not necessary that an elisor appointed by the court to serve an attachment on a sheriff, for his failure to return an attachment delivered to him, should be a resident of the same county with the officer in default, but under special circumstances an elisor residing in a different county may be appointed.[58]

Oath. In the absence of a statute so requiring, it is not necessary that an elisor should take an oath of office.[59]

§ 34. Posse Comitatus

In a proper case a sheriff may summon to his aid, in the enforcement of the law and preservation of the peace, the "posse comitatus," or the whole power of the county, and persons so called by the sheriff are bound to aid and assist him.

In a proper case the sheriff may summon to his aid, in the performance of his duties, the "posse comitatus,"[60] or the whole power of the county.[61] The right of the sheriff to summon a posse comitatus exists by virtue of the common law,[62] and statutes empowering a sheriff to summon suitable aid in the suppression of disturbances of the peace have been held to be an affirmance of the common law by which the sheriff might raise a posse comitatus.[63] The sheriff may call on a posse comitatus in preservation of the peace,[64] or where necessary for assistance in a criminal case.[65] There is a duty to summon a posse comitatus when such aid is necessary for the execution of mesne process in criminal proceedings,[66] or final process in civil actions,[67] but the sheriff is not required to summon the posse comitatus to aid in the execution of mesne process in civil actions,[68] although he has the right to do so.[69]

In order to constitute a posse comitatus the persons involved must be summoned by the sheriff in the exercise of the power of the county.[70] Persons called on by the sheriff are bound to aid and assist him;[71] to disobey the summons of the sheriff is to be guilty of an offense for which the offender may be punished.[72] Those orally deputized by a sheriff to aid him in making an arrest for felony are neither officers nor private persons,[73] but occupy the legal position of a posse comitatus;[74] and generally a member of a posse comitatus, while co-operating with the sheriff and acting under his orders, is just as much clothed with the protection of the law as is the sheriff himself.[75] Officers of different municipalities acting with a deputy sheriff in performance of duties owing to the respective political units each represents are not to be regarded as a posse comitatus.[76]

Number to be called. A sheriff may call on such number of men of the county as is necessary for assistance in any criminal case or in preservation of the peace.[77] Under a statute authorizing a county judge to order the sheriff to summon a posse of not less than two nor more than ten, the discretion as to the number within the limits of the provision is vested in the sheriff,[78] and, therefore, it is proper for the judge to leave the number to be determined by the sheriff.[79]

III. RIGHTS, POWERS, AND DUTIES

A. NATURE AND EXTENT

§ 35. In General

Sheriffs and constables have all the powers and duties appertaining to their office at common law except as modified by statute or the state constitution. Such powers and duties ordinarily are of a ministerial nature.

Duties imposed on sheriff as county officer

The sheriff is obligated to perform such duties as may be constitutionally imposed upon him in his capacity present time, to a very large extent regulated by statute[83] or the state constitution.[84] The authority of the sheriff includes not only that expressly given by statute, but also such implied authority as is necessary to carry out such express authority.[85] The powers and duties of a sheriff ordinarily are of a ministerial nature,[86] and the proper discharge of his duties calls for the exercise of good judgment and discretion,[87] particularly where he is considered the most important official functionary of the county.[88] The sheriff may at times exercise judicial functions and examine evidence and make up judgments which are to become the basis of his actions and conduct and of the actions and conduct of others.[89]

Since the duties and responsibilities of sheriffs are fixed by law,[90] they cannot be enlarged by private agreement between litigants,[91] and since a sheriff acts as an officer of the law[92] he is not, normally, an agent of either party to litigation.[93] A sheriff, while in the discharge of his official duties, cannot divest himself of his official character and do as an individual that which he cannot do as a public officer.[94]

Duty as to keeping office. There must be a compliance with statutory provisions requiring a sheriff to keep an office in the city or county in which the county courts are held, and to file notice of the place in the clerk's office.[95]

Change of duties. The legislature may, in the absence of constitutional restrictions, vary,[96] abridge,[97] or increase[98] the duties of sheriffs and constables.

Conferring duties on other officers. A constitutional provision that sheriffs shall be elected by the people of their respective counties does not prohibit the legislature from authorizing the governor to appoint other officers with the power of sheriffs for the enforcement of the state laws within the counties.[99] A statute requiring that traffic officers on public highways outside the limits of incorporated cities and towns be duly appointed and qualified deputies acting under the respective sheriffs of the several counties does not preclude reasonable regulations by county commissioners with respect to the duties of such statutory officers, provided no undue responsibility is imposed on the sheriff for the conduct of his duties with respect to traffic control.[1]

With respect to courts; court officers. A sheriff or his deputy required to attend sessions of court held in his county, as discussed in Courts § 169, has the duty to obey the lawful orders and directions of the court,[2] and to execute its process[3] and or-as a county officer—Pearce v. Stephens, 45 N.Y.S. 422, 18 App.Div. 101, affirmed 48 N.E. 1106, 153 N.Y. 673—57 C.J. p. 774 note 93.

Where sheriff furnished a monthly report to police jury listing expenditures of his office and names and salaries of his deputies and employees in compliance with statute, his failure also to furnish report to clerk of court as required by statute constituted a violation thereof—State ex rel. A statute limiting or restricting the powers of sheriffs is to be strictly construed.—Foster v. Vickery, 42 S.E.2d 117, 202 Ga. 55, conformed to Vickery v. Foster, 42 S.E.2d 451, 75 Ga.App. 121.

ders[4] He has no power to originate motions or present questions, in the names of the parties to a suit, for the action of the court.[5] The powers and duties of sheriffs and their deputies, while acting as court officers, are defined by statute, court rule, and order of the court,[6] and no discretion is vested in them to disobey.[7] A provision of a city charter for the appointment by the judges of the municipal court, from the constables elected for the several wards of the city, of such a number thereof as may be required to do the work of the court, does not create a new office, but the acts of an appointee are by virtue of his office as constable.[8]

§ 36. Territorial Extent of Authority

a. Of sheriff or deputy
b. Of constable or deputy

a. Of Sheriff or Deputy

As a general rule in the absence of a statute providing otherwise the authority of a sheriff is coextensive with his county.

Since the sheriff is a county officer, his authority extends over the entire county,[9] and includes all municipalities[10] and townships[11] within his county. As a general rule, however, his authority,[12] and the authority of a deputy sheriff appointed by him,[13] are limited to his own county. Accordingly, a sheriff cannot, as such, serve process outside his county.[14] Also a sheriff of one county ordinarily cannot levy on property in another county.[15] After a sheriff has levied on property within his county, he may pursue it if it is removed to another county,[16] but he has no right to exercise force to recover possession of such property,[17] although, where he has obtained peaceable possession of the property in another county, he may defend his possession by necessary force against anyone seeking to deprive him of it by force.[18]

Under a statute granting general authority to a sheriff to execute process issued and delivered to him, without territorial limitations on his authority to execute a warrant of arrest, a sheriff is authorized to go outside his county to execute such process.[19] Also, under statutes expressly conferring such power, a sheriff can make an arrest in certain cases beyond the limits of his own county,[20] as, for example, where the sheriff pursues an escaping offender into another county.[21] Where a statute so provides, the authority of a sheriff to arrest is coextensive with the bounds of the state,[22] but he is without power or authority beyond the state boundaries[23] except where he is designated as the

agent of the state in cases of extradition.[24] Under statute requiring any person when called on by a peace officer to aid or assist in the execution of a duty incumbent on such officer, a sheriff is under a duty to render such aid or assistance in making an arrest when he is called on by a peace officer while outside his county.[25]

Sale of land partly outside county. A sale under execution by a sheriff of land lying partly outside his county is void as to that part outside the county, although valid as to the part within the county.[26]

Effect of division of county. Where, after an execution is levied on realty in a certain county, the county is subdivided, such subdivision does not deprive the officer of the power to complete the execution of the process by a sale of the property.[27]

b. Of Constable or Deputy

In the absence of constitutional or statutory authority a constable cannot act outside his own district, precinct, or town.

It has been held that a constable, in the absence of constitutional or statutory authority, cannot act outside his own district, precinct, or town.[28] The legislature, however, may determine the area within his county in which a precinct constable may or must officially act,[29] and it has been held that, under express or implied statutory provisions, the authority of a constable may be coextensive with the limits of the county to which his precinct, district, or town belongs,[30] at least for some purposes[31] although not for others.[32] So it has been held that even though a constable is prohibited by law, under a penalty, from executing warrants and levying executions out of his particular precinct, his official acts in any part of the county are valid.[33] A constable may be empowered to serve process throughout the state,[34] but power to act throughout the county does not authorize a constable to execute process outside the limits of the county.[35]

Acts of deputy as acts of sheriff
The acts of a deputy sheriff in the performance of his official duties are in effect the acts of the sheriff as principal.—Jefferson County v. Dockerty, 30 So.2d 469, 33 Ala.App. 30, affirmed 30 So.2d 474, 249 Ala. 196.

Authority of deputy at pleasure of sheriff
The deputy's authority to act as a and in the name of,[39] the sheriff as principal, and he can perform no independent action of office,[40] and he has no greater rights or powers than the sheriff.[41] It has been held, however, that a return by a deputy in his own name as deputy sheriff is valid;[42] and under statute it has been broadly stated that deputy sheriffs have the same power and authority, as to official acts and duties, as that possessed by their principals.[43]

In some jurisdictions the sheriff is vested with absolute discretion to determine the duties of his office which shall be performed by his deputies.[44] On the other hand, it has been stated that the duties to be performed and the ends to be accomplished by a deputy sheriff are as prescribed and directed by law,[45] and that the deputy is neither the agent, servant, nor employee of the sheriff.[46]

While a deputy sheriff cannot exercise any judicial authority belonging to the sheriff,[47] he has authority to exercise any of the powers or to perform any of the duties appertaining to the office of the sheriff which are ministerial in their nature.[48] Accordingly, a deputy sheriff may act for the sheriff in the service[49] and return[50] of process, and the like,[51] in making an execution[52] or other judicial[53] sale, including the appraisal of the property as a

(1) A de facto deputy sheriff may validly serve process—Rounds v. McGeown, 3 A 2d 547, 110 Vt. 185.

(2) Authority of de facto officers generally see infra § 40.

Statutory basis of power

Power of deputy sheriffs to serve process is statutory, and unless conferred by statute expressly or by fair implication does not exist.—State ex rel. Madden v. Padberg, 101 S W.2d 1003, 340 Mo. 667.

As agent of law and of party

A deputy sheriff in serving process is the agent of the law and acts as a public officer, and is also an agent of the party at whose instance such process is issued—Gross v. Gates, 194 A 465, 109 Vt. 156.

Communicating with person addressed

A deputy sheriff armed with process for service has the right to insist on communicating with person to whom such process is addressed.—People ex rel. Paul v. Warden of City Prison of City of N. Y., 74 N.Y.S.2d 438, 190 Misc. 528.

Character of act

In conducting an execution sale a deputy sheriff is more than a mere private trustee or agent, since, in addition to his character as a minister of the law, he is regarded as a sort of trustee and agent both for the creditor and the debtor—Gross v. Gates, 194 A. 465, 109 Vt. 156.

preliminary to such sale[54] and the execution of a deed to the purchaser;[55] in executing a writ of ad quod damnum;[56] in serving a garnishment summons;[57] in serving an execution for taxes,[58] in receiving an appearance bond[59] and discharging accused on its execution;[60] in investigating an automobile accident;[61] in executing a warrant of arrest,[62] in executing process of attachment for witnesses;[63] in executing a death sentence;[64] and in impaneling a sheriff's jury[65] and administering the oath to them.[66]

A deputy has no general authority to make advances for the sheriff,[67] nor can a surety on a bail bond defend an action thereon by showing that he signed the bond on advice of a deputy sheriff[68] Likewise, a deputy sheriff has no authority to designate another to act in his stead for the sheriff.[69]

Notice to deputy sheriff is notice to the sheriff.[70]

Contracts. A deputy has no general or implied authority to bind the sheriff by a contract or promise[71] unless it be to pay over money collected under process.[72] On the other hand, it has been held that a deputy sheriff acts as the general agent for the sheriff while discharging his official duties and may bind his principal for expenses incurred therein.[73]

Chief deputy sheriff. Under a statute providing for the appointment of a chief deputy sheriff, in legal contemplation he acts in the sheriff's place;[74] and he and the sheriff may be considered as one as far as third persons are concerned.[75]

Deputy constable. A deputy constable ordinarily has the same authority, rights, powers, and duties as his principal, the constable,[76] and such deputy's acts are as valid as though performed by the constable;[77] but under statutes authorizing a magistrate to appoint constables for the service of his process a deputy constable cannot be vested by such a constable with power to make such service.[78]

Deputy sheriff as public officer. Since, as discussed supra § 2, a deputy sheriff is a public officer, he is intrusted, as such, with a portion of the sovereign power of the state,[79] and his duties in the execution of the law are performed in the exercise of power and authority bestowed by law.[80] A deputy sheriff must be disinterested and impartial,[81] and hence he lacks a private agent's usual characteristic which implies an interest favorable to one party and adverse to the other.[82]

of a constitutional provision that the duties of a sheriff must be performed by him personally or under his superintendence.[83]

Undersheriff. The undersheriff has the same duties and authority with respect to the ordinary duties of the sheriff as the sheriff himself,[84] but while the sheriff is in the execution of his office the undersheriff has no more power than any other general deputy.[85]

Special deputy Where a deputy sheriff is special in the sense that he is authorized to perform only part of the sheriff's duties, as discussed supra § 2, the time and extent of the exercise of the authority of the sheriff by such special deputy are matters solely for the determination of the sheriff.[86]

Ratification of act of unauthorized person. A sheriff cannot ratify the illegal act of one assuming without authority to act as his deputy in making a levy in his name, so as to render such act valid.[87]

b. Termination of Incumbency of Sheriff

An execution once begun by a deputy sheriff may be carried on to completion by him notwithstanding the sheriff has gone out of office.

At common law the office and functions of a deputy sheriff ipso facto terminate when the sheriff goes out of office by death, resignation, removal, or otherwise, as discussed supra § 26, except that an execution once begun by a deputy may be carried on to completion by him notwithstanding the sheriff has gone out of office.[88] Under a statute expressly so providing, a deputy sheriff may after the expiration of the sheriff's term execute all such original or final process as are in the deputy's hands at the time such term expires.[89] Where a sheriff who, at the expiration of his term of office, has in his hands process not fully executed dies before the complete execution thereof, it has been held that his late undersheriff becomes substituted in his place, and assumes all his duties in respect of such process.[90]

§ 38. Authority of Coroner Acting as Sheriff

A coroner who is performing the duties of the sheriff has the same rights and powers as the sheriff.

A coroner who is performing the duties of the sheriff has the same rights and powers as the sheriff,[91] and may convey land sold by him under execution.[92] Where the sheriff is disqualified[93] or the office of sheriff is vacant[94] the coroner is authorized to serve process. Accordingly, where there is a vacancy in the office of sheriff, the coroner may complete the execution of a process directed to the sheriff and partly executed by him before the vacancy occurred[95] A coroner is authorized to serve process on the sheriff,[96] and the fact that he is also a deputy sheriff does not preclude him from acting as sheriff in a case in which the sheriff is interested[97] Where a coroner has acted as sheriff, the legal presumption is that the facts existed which rendered it proper for him to act in the particular instance;[98] and a coroner to whom an execution has been directed and who pretends to act under it is estopped to deny his authority to do so in an action on his bond, although the necessity for the writ being executed by the coroner does not appear[99] It has been held that, in order to entitle a coroner to serve a writ of error, the petition for the writ must state that there is no sheriff or that there is some objection to the sheriff.[1]

Right to appoint deputy. A coroner acting as sheriff has been held authorized to appoint a deputy to assist him.[2]

§ 39. Authority of Special Officers

Where a special constable has once been appointed in a cause, he is authorized to perform all the subsequent duties required of a constable in that cause.

Where a special constable has once been appointed in a cause, he is authorized to perform all the subsequent duties required of a constable in that cause.[3] A person acting as a special constable to execute a warrant is authorized to command assistance in case of opposition.[4] Under a statute providing for the appointment of a special constable, such a constable can execute only the specific papers enumerated in the statute.[5]

Appointment for special purposes. Under a statute authorizing the appointment of a constable for special purposes, the constable so appointed has no authority to act as a constable generally.[6]

High constable. A statute providing for the office of high constable for boroughs and granting such constables the power and authority of constables of the several townships of the county has been construed to grant to a high constable the general power and authority of a constable,[7] but it has also been held that the statute does not enlarge the power and authority of a high constable to those of a constable.[8]

§ 40. Authority of de Facto Officers

The acts of a de facto sheriff, deputy, or constable, as far as the public or third persons are concerned, have the same validity as though the officer were such de jure.

The acts of a de facto sheriff, deputy sheriff, or constable, as far as they concern the public or third persons, have the same validity as though the officer were such de jure,[9] and his authority can be questioned only by those whose persons or property are directly affected by his acts.[10]

§ 41. Disqualification or Inability to Act in Particular Cases

a. Disqualification
b. Inability

a. Disqualification

A sheriff or constable is disqualified to perform the duties of his office in a case in which he is interested The disqualification of a deputy sheriff does not disqualify the sheriff.

A sheriff or constable cannot lawfully perform the duties of his office in a case in which he is interested[11] even though he is not directly affected by the act to be performed.[12] A sheriff has been held not to be disqualified, for interest, in the performance of the duties of his office, or otherwise, in the trial of a particular case unless he is a party to the proceedings or is related to a party by blood or affinity.[13] Although it has been held that usually the disqualification of a sheriff and his deputies for interest or prejudice is a matter within the discretion of the trial court,[14] the granting of a motion to disqualify them to participate in a case because of the sheriff's interest or prejudice has also been held to be mandatory where there has been a compliance with a statute authorizing such disqualification.[15] The disqualification of a deputy sheriff does not disqualify the sheriff,[16] but the disqualification of the sheriff in a particular case extends to the entire force of his office, and hence a deputy cannot do an act as to which the sheriff is disqualified.[17]

Conflicting evidence

The mere fact that the sheriff's office cooperates with the prosecutor's office in an effort to discover facts relating to an offense does not call for interference with the action of the trial court in refusing to disqualify the sheriff and his deputies from acting in a criminal prosecution where evidence of misconduct by the sheriff's office in aiding the prosecutor's office is conflicting.—State v. McDonald, supra.

of crime may disqualify him for the duty of summoning jurors for his trial, as discussed in Juries § 173; and the sheriff is disqualified to act as a guardian of a ward of the court of which the sheriff is an officer.[18] The sheriff and his deputies are disqualified to serve process in a case in which the sheriff is interested,[19] and a deputy sheriff may be disqualified to serve process in a case when he is a party to the proceeding[20] notwithstanding he has no pecuniary interest in the cause,[21] but a sheriff who is merely a formal party, without interest in the case, is not thereby disqualified to serve process.[22] The sheriff cannot legally serve or execute process on his deputy[23] even though such process is directed to the sheriff;[24] and the fact that the sheriff attached property before the owner was appointed deputy does not authorize him to serve the execution after such appointment.[25] Likewise, it is not proper for one deputy to serve process in a cause to which another deputy of the same sheriff is a party.[26]

b. Inability

Inability to act by reason of physical illness does not excuse a sheriff or constable for failure to perform the duties of his office.

The physical illness of a sheriff will not excuse a failure to perform the duties of his office, since he should provide deputies to act in such an emergency;[27] nor can a constable who retains process intrusted to him avoid liability for a failure to perform his duties in respect thereof on the ground of disability resulting from illness,[28] although it has been held that he may in such case relieve himself of liability by putting the business into the hands of another constable who is qualified to act.[29] On the other hand, it has been held that a constable cannot relieve himself from liability for failure to return an execution by turning over the writ to another constable.[30] The inability of an officer to serve process in a particular case is discussed in Process § 28 c.

B. PARTICULAR POWERS AND DUTIES

§ 42. Conservation of Peace and Arrest of Offenders

a. Sheriffs
b. Constables
c. Concurrent or conflicting powers and duties

a. Sheriffs

Sheriffs, and their deputies or undersheriffs, are peace officers, and, as such, exercise the powers and perform the duties of police officers, including the enforcement of the criminal law and the conservation of the peace.

At common law and under statutes declaratory thereof, sheriffs[31] and deputy sheriffs and undersheriffs[32] are peace officers. The duties of a sheriff are in a large measure the same as are imposed on police officers,[33] he necessarily exercises police powers[34] and must enforce the laws enacted for the protection of the lives, persons, property, health, and morals of the people.[35] Accordingly, a sheriff

Deputy sheriffs have the same responsibility for the proper discharge of duties relating to the public peace and enforcement of law as the sheriffs who are their principals.—Mur-

must enforce the criminal law.[36] He is under a legal duty to investigate crimes,[37] to suppress them,[38] and, in a proper case, to arrest and prosecute persons who commit them.[39] It is also his right and duty to arrest all persons, with their abetters, who oppose the execution of process[40] As a peace officer it is the sheriff's duty to act as a conservator of the peace within his county,[41] using, however, such force as may be necessary to preserve the peace.[42] So it is his duty to prevent breaches of the peace[43] and assaults and batteries,[44] to suppress an affray,[45] a riot,[46] an insurrection,[47] or an unlawful assembly,[48] and to arrest one provoking an assault.[49]

In the discharge of his duty to prevent and suppress breaches of the peace and other offenses, the sheriff is bound to use all the means provided by law to accomplish such end,[50] and he cannot shut his eyes to what is common knowledge in the community, or purposely avoid information, easily acquired, which will make it his duty to act.[51] He is under a duty to be active and vigilant,[52] to exercise initiative,[53] to be reasonably alert with respect to possible violations of law,[54] and to use all proper efforts to secure obedience to the law[55] The efforts of a sheriff to obtain a confession from a prisoner should be directed to the one purpose of getting a truthful statement without regard to whether or not the statement will lead to a conviction.[56]

b. Constables

A constable is a peace officer with limited powers, having the authority and duty to arrest offenders against the law; but he is not required to leave his ordinary occupation to seek such offenders.

A constable is a peace officer[57] with limited powers.[58] As such peace officer, a constable has authority, and it is his duty, to arrest offenders against the law,[59] but he is not required to leave his ordinary occupation to act as a detective and search for offenders,[60] and it is not a neglect of official duty for a constable to fail to cause the prosecution of persons for misdemeanors not committed in his presence.[61] A deputy constable who is hired and paid by the state has no right to hire out his services and talents to a defendant in a state case.[62]

c. Concurrent or Conflicting Powers and Duties

The sheriff may properly assume that local authorities are enforcing the law, but where the primary duty of law enforcement is his, if he has reason to believe that local enforcement is lacking he must undertake such enforcement. The authority of the sheriff is superior to that of a constable and in case of conflict it is the constable's duty to yield.

While the sheriff may, in the absence of information to the contrary, assume that a local police department will do its duty in enforcing the law,[63] the primary duty of such enforcement is his[64] and cannot be altered by custom.[65] So the sheriff may leave local law enforcement in local hands only as long as reasonable efforts in good faith are made, by the local police authorities, to enforce the law;[66] but if he has reason to believe that the police force is neglecting its duty or is in league with offenders he must inform himself,[67] and if he knows that city officials are deliberately ignoring or permitting violations of law his duty to prevent and suppress offenses is the same as though there were no municipality and no police force.[68] So, where it is the duty of both the mayor of a city and the sheriff of a county to maintain peace, the sheriff cannot justify his failure on the ground that it was the duty of the mayor.[69] A constitutional provision giving the attorney general direct supervision of sheriffs does not contemplate absolute control and direction of such officials[70] or permit them to avoid or evade the duties and responsibilities of their office by permitting a substitution of judgment.[71] A sheriff is not authorized to yield the general control of his office and duties to the attorney general under a constitutional provision making it the duty of that official to prosecute cases when in his opinion the law of the state is not being adequately enforced in any county.[72] Neither the creation of the office of state commissioner of prohibition nor the employment of a county prohibition officer by the prosecuting attorney pursuant to statute relieves the sheriff of the county from his duty to enforce the prohibition law,[73] and a constable is not deprived of his common-law powers as conservator of the peace by a statute establishing a police force.[74]

Conflict of authority of sheriff and constable. The sheriff's authority is superior to that of a constable,[75] and he has a right, and it is his duty, if he holds a felony warrant against a person held by a constable under a misdemeanor warrant, to take such person into his custody if he deems it necessary, and it is the duty of the constable to yield to the sheriff's superior authority.[76]

§ 43. Attendance at Inquests and Meetings of County Board

A sheriff is not required to attend an inquest under a statute making it the duty of a constable to do so. Where a statute so provides, a sheriff, when so ordered, must attend meetings of a county board.

Where a statute makes it the duty of a constable to attend a coroner's inquest, and provides for the calling of a householder when the constable cannot

§ 44. Service, Execution, and Return of Process

a. In general
b. Authority as affected by direction of process
c. Time for execution
d. Mode of executing process
e. Diligence required
f. Return

a. In General

The power of a sheriff or constable, to serve process is wholly statutory. When such power and duty are conferred on a sheriff or constable he must serve all process delivered for that purpose, provided it appears on its face to have issued from competent authority, with legal regularity, and such service is within the lawful powers of his office.

With respect to the execution of process, the power possessed by the sheriff[79] or constable[80] is wholly statutory, and no power exists in him except such as is expressly so conferred or may be fairly implied from the provisions thereof.[81] Where such power is conferred on a sheriff, the service of process is one of the ministerial duties pertaining to his office,[82] and he can deputize another to make such service.[83] Where the power and duty to serve or execute process are conferred on a sheriff or constable, he must serve or execute all process delivered to him for that purpose,[84] which appears on its face to have issued from competent authority,[85] and with legal regularity,[86] and the service or execution of which is within the lawful powers of his office.[87] This duty is not affected by any private knowledge which he may have concerning the existence of the cause of action to which the process relates[88] or the validity of the proceedings in which the process was issued;[89] nor can a sheriff refuse to serve a process regularly issued to him because in his opinion it is irregular[90] or should not have been issued.[91] On the other hand, he may refuse to execute process which is illegal on its face,[92] or appears to have been issued without jurisdiction,[93] or to have been issued on a void judgment.[94]

Conflict of authority. A process of one court to its officer may not be served by a manual interference with the possession of property in the custody of an officer of another court by virtue of its process.[95] Where a conflict arises between a sheriff acting under process of a state court and a United States marshal who has made a subsequent levy on the same property, the sheriff must either apply to the state court to be protected or petition the federal court to order its officers to withdraw.[96]

Arrest under body execution. Under a statute providing that constables shall serve all lawful process issued and legally directed to them, a constable is authorized to arrest a debtor under an execution against his body.[97] A sheriff is not bound to arrest defendant on a capias ad satisfaciendum, lodged with him for fixing his bail, even if he can arrest him as well as not.[98]

Deprivation of right to execute process. An inferior court cannot arbitrarily refuse to place process in the hands of a regularly appointed and competent constable for execution.[99]

Execution of writ of assistance. A sheriff is bound to execute a properly issued writ of assistance,[1] and cannot refuse to do so on the ground that the person in possession has a better title than the claimant under the writ.[2]

Marking day of receipt on process. Under a statute making it the duty of the sheriff to mark on each process the day on which he received it, a sheriff is bound to mark the true date on a writ placed in his hands for execution.[3]

Order of execution. Where two or more writs against the same defendant are placed in the hands of the sheriff, it is his duty to execute them in the order in which he received them.[4]

b. Authority as Affected by Direction of Process

The authority of a sheriff or constable to serve process is derived from its being addressed to him.

A sheriff's power to serve process is derived from its being addressed to him,[5] and, as a general rule, he has no authority to serve process which is not directed to him.[6] A constable cannot execute process addressed to the sheriff,[7] although the sheriff delivers it to him,[8] unless he is appointed a deputy sheriff for the purpose.[9] Likewise, the sheriff cannot serve process addressed to a constable[10] unless the statute so provides.[11] Where process directed to "any constable or other lawful officer of the county" comes into the hands of the sheriff, he must execute it.[12]

A sheriff of one county cannot legally serve process directed to the sheriff of another county.[13] Similarly, a constable of one county cannot serve process directed to the sheriff or any constable of another county.[14]

c. Time for Execution

As a general rule a sheriff should execute a writ without delay and within a reasonable time after he receives it.

As a general rule a sheriff should execute a writ without delay and within a reasonable time after he receives it,[15] although it has been held that in the absence of special circumstances a sheriff has until the return day in which to make service of process.[16] At any rate, in the absence of directions by plaintiff in the writ[17] or knowledge of special circumstances requiring greater diligence,[18] execution of the writ within the time allowed by law is sufficient.[19] Where a sheriff has knowledge or reasonable ground to believe that there will be danger of loss to the creditor through delay in the execution of a writ, it is his duty to execute it immediately.[20]

d. Mode of Executing Process

(1) In general
(2) Direction as to mode

(1) In General

A sheriff should execute process in such manner as to do as little mischief as possible.

A sheriff should execute every writ put in his hands in such a manner as to do as little mischief as possible,[21] and where he acts wrongfully or causes unnecessary hardship the process affords him no protection, as considered infra § 127, and he is liable for the resulting damages as discussed infra § 62. An officer is not required to declare by what authority he acts until his authority is questioned.[22]

Use of force. In executing a writ of assistance the sheriff has the right to use such force as is reasonably necessary to effectuate such process.[23] The rule is well established, however, that a sheriff or constable may not break into or forcibly enter a dwelling house for the purpose of seizing goods under attachment, as discussed in Attachment § 216, execution, discussed in Execution § 96 a, or other process, in Process § 34 d; and if he does so he will be liable for damages, as discussed infra § 62.

(2) Direction as to Mode

(a) Directions of party or attorney
(b) Duty in absence of directions
(c) Application to court for directions

(a) Directions of Party or Attorney

The sheriff is bound to follow the directions of the party procuring the process or his attorney as to how it shall be executed, at least where such directions are not in conflict with the law.

The party at whose instance certain process or writs, such as attachment or executions, have issued, or his attorney, has the right to give the sheriff directions as to how they shall be executed,[24] which directions, when not in conflict with the law, the sheriff is bound to follow,[25] and the officer is not bound, in such case, to execute the process or writ in any manner other than according to the directions given him.[26] It is not the duty of the sheriff on an execution against one person to levy on the property of another,[27] or to apply firm property to the satisfaction of an execution against one of the partners,[28] even though plaintiff may direct him to do so.

Conflicting directions. If the execution plaintiff and his attorney give contrary directions, those of plaintiff must be followed.[29]

Ownership of judgment; assignment. The sheriff is not bound to obey the directions of a person other than the owner of the judgment on which the writ was issued, or his attorney, although such person claims an interest in the judgment;[30] but where the sheriff has notice of the assignment of the judgment he cannot take instructions from plaintiff's attorney, but must obey his execution and conform to the rules of law with regard to it, except as otherwise instructed by the assignee.[31]

Revocation of attorney's authority. After a sheriff has notice of the revocation of the authority of the attorney by whom the execution was issued, he must obey his execution and conform to the rules of law applicable to it, except as instructed by plaintiff himself.[32]

(b) Duty in Absence of Directions

In the absence of directions, a writ is to be served according to its precept, and agreeably to its direction, if the officer can find property by the exercise of reasonable diligence.

Where an officer receives a writ without any special directions, he is bound to execute it according to its precept,[33] and agreeably to its direction,[34] if he can find property by the exercise of reasonable diligence.[35]

(c) Application to Court for Directions

The court will not direct or advise the sheriff as to the manner of executing process.

The court will not direct the sheriff in what manner he shall execute process,[36] nor will it advise the sheriff by ordering him to do particular acts as being essential and proper to the rightful performance of his duty,[37] but the sheriff must act on his own responsibility.[38]

e. Diligence Required

A sheriff must use due diligence in executing process; but he is not required to use all possible efforts in any particular case.

Where a sheriff has in his hands a summons to serve or a writ to execute, he must in good faith make all reasonable effort and use due diligence to find defendant, or discover property subject to the writ, and serve or execute such process in the most effective manner,[39] but he is not required to use all possible efforts to execute process in any particular case,[40] since he might thereby lose the opportunity of executing other process in his hands.[41]

f. Return

The sheriff or constable is under the duty to return process of a nature requiring a return, and, on his refusal, the court will compel him to do so.

Where the process is of a nature requiring a return, it is the duty of the sheriff or constable to return it,[42] whether or not executed;[43] and the officer does not fulfill this duty by sending the return by mail without paying the postage thereon.[44] An agreement by the execution creditor with the officer to postpone the sale after a levy issued by a justice of the peace does not absolve the officer from his duty to return the writ.[45] If the sheriff refuses to return a writ, the court will compel him to do so,[46] and if he makes an evasive return he may be required to perfect it according to the facts of the case;[47] but a special return showing what property was sold cannot be compelled.[48] In garnishment proceedings, the sheriff, after making his return, has no further duty to perform.[49] A sheriff may be permitted to amend his return according to the truth of the case, provided rights acquired under it are not thereby prejudiced.[50] Where the sheriff

§ 45. —— Levy of Attachment or Execution

a. Attachment
b. Execution

a. Attachment

A sheriff must levy a writ of attachment according to its command and nature, taking into his custody the goods to be seized.

In accordance with general rules, a sheriff must execute a writ of attachment according to its command and nature,[56] and he is bound to take into his custody the goods to be seized.[57] It is the duty of the constable to remove property attached from the attachment debtor's premises within a reasonable time,[58] and he has no right to exclude the debtor from such premises by permitting such property to remain thereon.[59] In levying an attachment, a sheriff is not bound to levy on property whereof the title is not in doubt, in preference to property as to the title to which there is some doubt.[60] Where a sheriff or constable finds personal property in possession of the attachment defendant, he may presume, in the absence of notice to the contrary, that the person in possession is the owner of the property, and it is his duty to levy on it accordingly.[61]

b. Execution

(1) In general
(2) Property to be levied on
(3) Release of levy; claims by third persons

(1) In General

A sheriff must execute a writ of execution pursuant to its mandate, and retain or distribute the proceeds as ordered by the court.

The sheriff must execute a valid writ of execution pursuant to its mandate,[62] and retain[63] or distribute[64] the proceeds as ordered by the court. In levying an execution it is the duty of the sheriff to seize as much of defendant's goods as will be reasonably sufficient, if sold, to satisfy the debt and costs.[65] Where the right of exemption is one which may be waived or claimed at will, it is the duty of the officer to proceed until some claim for exemption is lawfully interposed.[66] It is ordinarily the duty of a sheriff in levying on goods in execution to take them into his possession,[67] or at least to have them in sight.[68] The responsibility of the sheriff levying on goods for execution to produce them when required for sale continues after a stay of sale,[69] and he continues to have a special property or qualified right in such goods while the responsibility itself continues.[70]

(2) Property to Be Levied on

In levying an execution it is the duty of the sheriff to levy on any goods or chattels of the judgment debtor which are subject to execution and can be found within the sheriff's jurisdiction.

In levying an execution it is the duty of the sheriff to levy on any goods or chattels of the judgment debtor which are subject to execution[71] and can be found within the sheriff's jurisdiction.[72] In execution proceedings it is not, however, the business of the sheriff to judge, as between parties, who is the legal owner of land, but it is proper for him to levy on land as the property of him who appears to be owner, according to the land records of the county.[73] If he finds the property in the possession of the execution defendant, it is his duty to take and deliver it as commanded;[74] and, if he finds the property in the possession of a third person, he must also take and deliver it, unless he can justify his refusal to do so by showing that such person has a title or right of possession superior to that of defendant.[75] Notwithstanding a statute allowing defendant in execution to designate the property on which the levy shall be made, where defendant is absent, and cannot be notified thereof, it is the duty of the sheriff to levy on all property not specifically exempt,[76] and permit defendant to make his selection afterward.[77] Where plaintiff in execution is permitted to point out the property to be levied on, it has been held that this is only to aid the officer in identifying the property as that of defendant, and does impose on him an obligation to levy on that particular property in preference to other property.[78] On the other hand, it has been held that, where specific land is pointed out, it is the sheriff's duty to levy thereon regardless of what he may believe as to the title.[79]

(3) Release of Levy; Claims by Third Persons

A sheriff, having attached property and made a return, has no authority to release such property, even though it is exempt. On the filing of an affidavit of claim by a third person, under some statutes, a sheriff is under a duty to impanel a jury to determine the claimant's title.

After a sheriff has attached property and made a return, he has no authority to release the property, even though it is exempt.[80] Under a statute declaring the effect of perfecting an appeal and giving a stay bond to be to release from levy property levied on under execution issued on the judgment, it has been held to be the duty of the sheriff to release all property levied on immediately on notice of the perfection of an appeal and the filing of the stay bond, without regard to the sufficiency of the sureties.[81] Under a permissive statute a sheriff who is prevented by injunction from selling personal property taken in execution may, without becoming, answerable to plaintiff, redeliver such property to the party from whom it has been taken.[82] Under some statutes it is the duty of the sheriff to see that a valid bond is given for all property which is released from levy.[83]

On the filing of an affidavit of claim by a third person with the sheriff, under some statutes he is under a duty forthwith,[84] or at least before incurring storage charges,[85] to impanel a jury to determine claimant's title.

§ 46. Custody and Care of Property

It is the duty of the sheriff to keep in his custody property of which he has taken possession under any process or writ, and within certain limits to do all things necessary for its preservation, until it can be lawfully disposed of, unless it is necessary to sell it prior thereto because of its perishable nature.

do all things necessary for its preservation,[87] until it can be disposed of in some lawful manner, as by sale to satisfy the debt,[88] or by a return thereof to the owner,[89] unless it is necessary to sell the property before such time because of its perishable nature.[90] Likewise, the sheriff does not have the right to permit plaintiff to use attached property pending litigation.[91] Good faith on the part of a sheriff in executing a possessory warrant may require that he take the property seized before the judge or justice who issued the warrant[92] or some other judge or justice of the county.[93]

Custody of courthouse and jail. Custody of the courthouse is a duty which at common law rests on the sheriff as an incident to his general duties,[94] but under a statute giving a sheriff the custody and care of the courthouse and jail of his county, "except as otherwise provided," the sheriff is a mere custodian of the building, and he has no estate or interest, possessory or other, therein.[95] A statute putting the sheriff in charge and control of the courthouse, subject to regulations of the commissioners' court, places the sheriff in charge and control merely for the purpose of keeping order and preserving the property,[96] and not for the purpose of keeping the building in usable condition,[97] which is a duty calling for the exercise of discretion in the use of the contracting power of the county.[98]

Use of force to protect possession A sheriff has a right to use all necessary force to protect his possession of property seized under process.[99]

§ 47. Sales and Conveyances

It is the duty of the sheriff to conduct the sale of property seized by him under execution, and to collect the purchase money.

It is one of the duties of the sheriff to conduct the sale of property seized by him under execution[1] within a reasonable time,[2] and at a reasonable price,[3] at the time of the sale,[4] and to collect the purchase money,[5] and the fact that, if he made the sale, some superior lien might claim the money is not a sufficient reason for failure to perform his duty in this respect.[6] It is the sheriff's duty to execute conveyances of real estate sold by him,[7] and, where he sells personal property, he must deliver it to the purchaser,[8] but he has no authority to give a warranty deed.[9] It is not the sheriff's duty to settle disputes arising, after a sale and delivery to the purchaser of a certificate of sale, between the purchaser and third persons as to the right of possession.[10]

Where the statutes require constables to execute all process delivered to them by any lawful officer, and also require all process, unless otherwise provided, to be directed to both sheriff and constable, a constable has power to sell land under an order of sale issued from the district court, although the sheriff is competent to act[11]

§ 48. Collection, Custody, and Disposition of Money

a. Collection or receipt
b. Custody and disposition

a. Collection or Receipt

A sheriff or constable is bound to obtain, if he can, the amount of an execution placed in his hands, but he has no authority as such to receive payment of a debt due a party to an action until a writ of execution is issued to him.

A sheriff or constable is bound to obtain, if possible, the amount of an execution placed in his hands,[12] but he has no authority in his official capacity to settle the demand and receive the money of the debtor.[13] A sheriff, in receiving money paid to redeem property sold on foreclosure of a mortgage, acts only in his official capacity and is in no sense the agent of the purchaser at the foreclosure sale,[14] and the fact that the person redeeming pays the sheriff more than is necessary gives him no rights as against the purchaser[15] In the absence of provision in the writ of execution for the collection of costs the sheriff has no duty to collect them.[16] Where the statute makes it the duty of the sheriff to collect forthwith the jury fee from the person in whose favor a verdict is rendered, the sheriff is responsible for the fee, and the court will aid him in its collection.[17] A sheriff or constable has no authority as such to receive payment of a debt due a party to an action until a writ of execution is issued to him;[18] nor, unless the statute so provides,[19] is it any part of his official duty to endeavor to collect demands put into his hands without process,[20] but, if he undertakes to do so, he acts merely as the agent of the creditor.[21] Where it is the sheriff's duty to collect a fine adjudged against a prisoner in his custody, he is entitled to sue on a note given to him by the prisoner to effect his release.[22]

Payment of a judgment to the sheriff is considered in Judgments §§ 551, 552.

b. Custody and Disposition

(1) In general
(2) Payment to person entitled or into court

(1) In General

A sheriff or constable is bound to keep safely and properly dispose of all moneys received by him in his official capacity.

A sheriff or constable is bound to keep safely and properly dispose of all moneys received by him in his official capacity[23] He does not hold funds collected under execution as agent for plaintiff in execution,[24] and is under no legal obligation to follow his direction as to their distribution.[25] Where the duties of a sheriff or constable as to moneys received by him are expressly defined by statute, a garnishee, in depositing a check for the amount of his indebtedness, is chargeable with knowledge of such duties,[26] and cannot impose on the officer conditions on which the check shall be received.[27] A sheriff who receives two writs against the same fund must, on receiving the fund, hold it until the conflicting claims of the parties can be determined.[28] Where a sheriff having several writs against the same person in favor of different creditors takes an indemnity bond from one of the creditors and sells in consequence of that indemnity, he has no right to apply to the court for its advice as to the distribution or payment of the money raised by it, especially where he has not paid the money into court.[29]

Refunding money collected. Under a statute authorizing the sheriff to collect debts and credits of defendant which have been attached, on the dismissal of an attachment, the sheriff is bound to pay to the successful defendant moneys collected under the attachment from such defendant's debtor.[30] So, also, when an execution on which money has been made is superseded, it is the duty of the sheriff to refund the money to defendant, if it is in his hands at the time.[31]

Recovery back of money paid. Where a sheriff has paid out money collected under process in satisfaction of a junior lien, he cannot recover it back on his being compelled to pay a senior lien to which such money should have been applied.[32]

Statements of fees and disbursements. One holding the office of sheriff and ex officio collector should prepare and file separate statements of account of fees and disbursements of each office.[33]

(2) Payment to Person Entitled or into Court

The sheriff is bound to pay money which he has collected to the person entitled thereto or to his attorney. The sheriff may properly pay such money into court, particularly where there are conflicting claims.

When money is collected by the sheriff, ordinarily he is bound to pay it over to the person entitled thereto,[34] or his attorney,[35] and the pendency of a motion to discharge an attachment of the debtor's property does not affect the officer's duty.[36] Where the officer has notice of the assignment of the judgment, the sheriff must hold the proceeds of the execution thereon for the use of the assignee,[37] although payment to the creditor's attorneys has been held binding where the assignee recognized and acquiesced in the acts of such attorneys in issuing execution.[38] He may, if he sees fit, pay over such money before the return day of the writ,[39] but he is not bound to do so.[40] Indeed, it is held that a sheriff or constable may lawfully hold money collected by him on an execution until a demand upon him therefor is made by one entitled to receive it,[41] but a demand on the officer turns the claim into an ordinary debt and renders it his duty to seek out the creditor and make payment within a reasonable time.[42]

Payment into court. At common law it is proper for the sheriff to pay into court money collected under an execution,[43] and this practice has been held to be proper at the present time,[44] especially where there are conflicting claims to the fund,[45] so that the officer may be protected from liability in case of mistake, as discussed infra § 91.

§ 49. Miscellaneous Powers and Duties

The powers and duties of sheriffs and constables with respect to various miscellaneous matters have been judicially determined.

In addition to those particular powers and duties considered supra §§ 42-48, the courts have passed on various other powers and duties of sheriffs and constables, such as the rights and powers of the sheriff or constable with respect to elections,[46] and the posse comitatus.[47] The capacity of a constable to act as attorney is discussed in Attorney and Client § 49.

voluntarily assumes the position of a bail may be estopped from denying his capacity to become such.[49] Where there is no prohibitory rule, it has been held that a deputy sheriff may become bail.[50]

Contracts and agreements. An agreement by a sheriff colore officii not in conformity with statute,[51] such as an agreement to delay execution sale,[52] or an agreement by which a party under arrest is permitted to go at large on terms other than those prescribed by statute,[53] is void. The sheriff, considered as a mere ministerial officer, has no authority, in the absence of statute, to pledge the credit of the county or create a county debt.[54]

Custody and control of convicts. On the conviction and sentence of a person, it is the duty of the sheriff of the county where the judgment of conviction has been rendered[55] to take such convicted person into custody,[56] and to keep him in custody[57] or dispose of him[58] in accordance with the judgment of the court and the law. So, such sheriff must convey to the penitentiary one convicted and sentenced thereto;[59] and it is the duty of the sheriff in another county, where the convicted person is found, to assist by holding him for delivery to the sheriff of the county where the judgment has been rendered.[60] It is no part of the duty of the sheriff to see that county convict contractors execute the bonds required by statute before entering on the discharge of their duties.[61] A constable who is also a city police officer, in delivering prisoners to state institutions pursuant to precepts from a municipal court and making his return as constable, is acting for the state as constable and is not answerable to the city.[62]

The right of the sheriff, as jailer ex officio, to the custody and control of the county prisons and of the prisoners confined therein, is discussed in Prisons § 8.

Destruction of dogs running at large; entry on private property. A statute directing sheriffs and constables to kill unlicensed dogs which they find going at large does not authorize an officer to enter into private premises in order to kill a dog,[63] or to obtain possession of and carry away the body of a dog which he has killed in the exercise of his official duty.[64]

Juries. The power of a county sheriff, under statute, to select sheriff's juries is divested by a constitutional provision vesting in other specified county officers power to summon grand and petit juries.[65] The sheriff, as the proper officer for the selection, drawing, and summoning of juries generally, is considered in Juries §§ 165, 173, and for the drawing and summoning of a grand jury, in Grand Juries §§ 10, 15.

Preservation and exhibition of papers. It is the duty of the sheriff to preserve the papers left with him by a creditor redeeming property sold under execution, and to exhibit them, on request, to any third person having an interest in the matter.[66]

Protection of property. A sheriff, constable, or deputy cannot, as such, engage to guard the property of a private individual or corporation not in the custody of the law,[67] and the fact that one is a deputy sheriff does not entitle him to any more rights or privileges in and about private property than any other person except in the performance of some official duty;[68] but an act of such character done in his private capacity may not be unlawful[69] Likewise, it is not within the functions of a constable or deputies to engage in conducting and soliciting business for a private patrol service.[70]

C. EFFECT OF CHANGE IN INCUMBENCY

§ 50. Rights, Powers, and Duties of Retiring Sheriff

a. In general
b. Custody of property levied on or seized under attachment
c. Making or amendment of return
d Undertaking new business
e. Turning over books, papers, records, process, and prisoners to successor

a. In General

While the general powers of a sheriff or constable cease when he goes out of office, at common law and under a number of the statutes the officer who commences the execution of a process or writ must complete it, even though he goes out of office before he can do so.

While the general powers of a sheriff or constable cease when he goes out of office,[71] it is a rule of the common law, preserved by express statute in many jurisdictions, that the officer who commences the execution of a process or writ must complete it, even though he goes out of office before he can do so;[72] and it has been laid down that a sheriff who has, during his term, begun an execution under proper authority may be compelled to proceed with it.[73] A sheriff is not authorized to execute any writ not in his hands at the time his term expired, and which he had not before that time begun to execute.[74] Under a statute providing that every sheriff going out of office at the expiration of his term, and having any execution which he may have levied but not collected, may proceed and collect it in the same manner as if his term of office had not expired, a sheriff who commences a suit before the expiration of his term, for the conversion of property levied on by him, may continue to prosecute the suit to judgment, even though the trial takes place after the expiration of his term.[75] A sheriff who has gone out of office may sue on a forthcoming bond given and made payable to him by a claimant of property seized under a writ[76] A retiring constable who delivers to his successor unexpired executions is not required to return them.[77]

Deputy sheriff. It is not competent for a deputy sheriff, after his term has expired, or while he is the deputy of a succeeding sheriff, to perfect the entry of a levy on a described lot of land by signing it;[78] nor can a deputy who has removed from the county in which he held office complete the execution of process commenced before his removal.[79]

Collection of purchase money or enforcement of liability on bid. A sheriff who has sold property at judicial or execution sale may, after going out of office, sue the successful bidder for the purchase money,[80] or for the difference between his bid and the price at which the property was resold on his default in payment.[81] On the other hand, it has been held that, after a sheriff has resigned, he has no right to keep or collect bonds given to him for the price of the property sold.[82]

Since all official trusts pass to a deceased sheriff's successor in office, as considered infra § 51, and not to his personal representative, the administrator of a deceased sheriff is not entitled to recover the price of property sold by the sheriff at a judicial sale without the assent of his successor in office.[83]

Sale of property. As a general rule it is obligatory on the outgoing sheriff to sell, after the expiration of his term, property which he had seized during his term,[84] or complete a sale which he had advertised while in office.[85] Where, however, pending the arrest of a levy by an affidavit of illegality, and after the sheriff has taken the statutory bond, his term of office expires, he is in no default for returning the papers to the clerk's office without selling the property.[86]

Execution of deed. In the absence of a statute to the contrary,[87] the sheriff who conducted a sale of property under legal process may execute a deed therefor after the expiration of his term of office.[88]

Paying over money. It is proper for a sheriff, on going out of office, to pay over money which he has realized on writs and has on hand to the person legally entitled to receive it.[89] A statute requiring county officers to pay over to the county treasurer unclaimed moneys and providing for their payment to claimants is inapplicable to a sheriff whose term of office has expired prior to the effective date of such statute.[90]

b. Custody of Property Levied on or Seized under Attachment

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, a sheriff going out of office is not required to transfer the goods levied on by him under an execution to his successor, and a sheriff or constable who seizes property under attachment should retain possession thereof until the suit is determined or the attachment is dissolved, although he goes out of office before that time.

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, a sheriff going out of office is not required to transfer the goods levied on by him under an execution to his successor,[91] and is not relieved of responsibility for such goods.[92] Likewise a sheriff or constable who seizes property under attachment should retain possession thereof until the suit is determined or the attachment is dissolved, although he goes out of office before that time,[93] and he is not required to turn over the attached property to his successor[94] unless the statute so provides.[95] So, where a deputy sheriff has made a valid attachment, his subsequent resignation does not deprive him of the right to bring an action for conversion of the property.[96] On the other hand, in the absence of a permissive statute,[97] it has been held that a sheriff cannot, after going out of office, retain attached property for the purpose of sale under final process.[98]

c. Making or Amendment of Return

After going out of office a sheriff or constable may make a return on process which he commenced to execute while in office. He may also, with the sanction of the court, amend a return made while in office; but it has been held that this may not be done without court sanction.

After going out of office a sheriff or constable may make a return on process which he commenced to execute during his incumbency.[99] However, it has been held that a sheriff who has arrested a person on a capias ad respondendum has no right to return the writ after he is out of office,[1] but should deliver it to his successor, with the assignment of the prisoner, so that the new sheriff may return it with his indorsement of the discharge of the prisoner on bail.[2]

Amendment. A return made by an officer while in office may, with the sanction of the court, be amended by him after going out of office,[3] and a sheriff may be permitted to amend a return of his deputy, since deceased, after, as well as before, the expiration of his own term of office.[4] On the other hand, it has been held that, without the sanction of the court, an officer cannot amend a return after he has gone out of office,[5] although there is authority to the contrary.[6]

Omission of jurat. Where the return of the sheriff does not appear to be sworn to, the fact that it was in fact sworn to, and that the clerk's jurat was omitted, may be shown by the sheriff after he has gone out of office.[7]

Amendment pending action for trespass The court has refused to allow a sheriff who had gone out of office to amend his return pending an action against him for trespass committed under the writ [8]

d. Undertaking New Business

A sheriff who has gone out of office cannot commence to execute a writ or process.

The mere delivery of a process or writ to a sheriff does not give him an indefeasible right to execute it, but, if he does not commence to execute it before going out of office, he cannot afterward proceed to do so [9] It is not proper to issue a process or writ to a sheriff after his term has expired,[10] and, when a process or writ comes to his hands after the expiration of his term of office, he has no more authority to execute it than any other private individual [11] A fortiori a sheriff who has gone out of office has no authority to do an official act under an execution which is directed to his successor.[12]

Sheriff holding over. A sheriff may enter on new business notwithstanding the expiration of his term where he is holding over by reason of his successor having not yet qualified and taken possession of the office.[13]

e. Turning Over Books, Papers, Records, Process, and Prisoners to Successor

It is the duty of the outgoing sheriff to turn over to his successor all books and papers appertaining to the office, as well as all process and writs on which he has not begun execution, and bonds payable to the outgoing sheriff in his official capacity. He must also turn over prisoners in his custody.

It is the duty of the outgoing sheriff, either under the common law or under the express or implied provisions of the statutes, to turn over to his successor all books and papers appertaining to the office;[14] all process and writs which he has not begun to execute,[15] and bonds payable to him in his official capacity [16]

Prisoners in custody of outgoing officer. It was the doctrine of the common law that an outgoing sheriff must deliver by indenture all prisoners in his custody under an execution,[17] and, having done so, is relieved from liability for an escape as discussed infra § 118. Statutes enacted in some jurisdictions have not materially changed the law in this respect.[18]

§ 51. Rights, Powers, and Duties of New Sheriff

The new sheriff, in so far as his agency is necessary, has the duty to complete the unfinished business of his predecessor. All official trusts pass to the successor of a deceased sheriff.

It is the duty of the new sheriff to complete the unfinished business left by his predecessor in so far as his agency is necessary therefor,[19] where the business is not of such character that the retiring sheriff should complete it notwithstanding his having gone out of office as discussed supra § 50. So, in the absence of a statute to the contrary,[20] where a sheriff goes out of office after levying an attachment, his successor is the proper person to levy an execution issued on a judgment in the action in which the attachment issued.[21] All official trusts pass to the successor of a deceased sheriff.[22]

Execution of process. It is the duty of a new sheriff to execute all process and writs which are in the sheriff's office at the time when he is inducted thereinto and which his predecessor has not previously begun to execute,[23] notwithstanding such process or writs are directed to his predecessor,[24]

and it has been held that, for the purpose of receiving a summons to be served, an outgoing sheriff, retaining possession of the office after his successor is entitled to it, may be deemed the latter's agent [25] Where his predecessor has begun to levy execution on process directed to him, the new sheriff has no liability or responsibility for the property levied on,[26] and on a return of no goods found to a writ of venditioni exponas he does not have such interest in the property levied on as will authorize him to maintain trover for its conversion during his predecessor's term of office.[27]

Sale of property. An order for the sale of real estate taken in an attachment suit goes to the sheriff in office at the time, and not to his predecessor, who served the writ.[28] Under a statute providing that process remaining with the officer unexecuted at the expiration of his term may be executed by his successor, where a sheriff has made a levy on personalty under an execution, his successor in office may complete the sale.[29] Also, under a statute providing that, when an officer shall have begun to serve an execution and shall die, or be incapable of completing the service and return thereof, it may be completed by any other officer who might by law have executed it if originally delivered to him, where an execution has been issued and a levy has been made by a deputy sheriff, a deputy of a succeeding sheriff may validly conduct the sale where the deputy of the original sheriff is unable to do so [30]

Receipt and distribution of money. The successor of a sheriff is the proper person to take over moneys received by his predecessor by virtue of his office, and to distribute such money to the person entitled thereto.[31] An incoming sheriff does not have the right to require his predecessor to deliver to him the moneys realized by the latter on executed writs, for which the outgoing sheriff and his sureties are liable on his official bond.[32]

Amendment of return. A return made by a sheriff while in office may, with the sanction of the court, be amended by his successor.[33]

Execution or acknowledgment of deed for property sold by predecessor. A sheriff cannot execute a deed for property sold by his predecessor,[34] unless the statute so provides;[35] nor can a sheriff acknowledge a deed executed by his predecessor for property sold by him.[36]

IV. CIVIL LIABILITIES

A. IN GENERAL

§ 52. General Rules

As a general rule a sheriff or constable is liable for his wrongful acts to persons injured thereby.

Sheriffs and constables are held to a high degree of accountability in the enforcement of the law and the proper and honest conduct of their office;[37] and one may rely on their faithfully performing the duties of their office [38] As a general rule, a sheriff or constable who is guilty of misfeasance or nonfeasance in office is liable therefor to the person injured thereby,[39] and the ignorance of the officer as to what was his duty under the circumstances

Criminal responsibility see infra §§ 209, 210.

Unlawful exercise of authority
The law gives to a citizen a right of action against a sheriff for an unlawful exercise of his authority.—People v. Spear, 89 P.2d 445, 32 Cal.App.2d 165, certiorari denied Spear v. People of State of Cal., 60 S.Ct. 116, 308 U.S. 555, 84 L.Ed. 466.

cannot protect him from liability for neglect to perform that duty.[40] A sheriff may be liable personally although not liable on his official bond.[41] Thus, while the liability of the sureties attaches only to acts done by the sheriff in the execution of his official duties, as considered infra § 178, his personal liability extends to any wrongful act whether or not committed in the performance of his official duties.[42]

A sheriff or constable is, of course, not liable for damages arising from his lawful acts,[43] and ordinarily he is not liable at the suit of a third person to whom he owes no official duty.[44] Where a duty of the sheriff may lawfully be performed by the judgment creditor and he undertakes to perform it he cannot hold the sheriff liable for failure to perform it;[45] and a fortiori a sheriff cannot be held liable for a failure to do something which he had no authority to do.[46] Where an act of a sheriff, although perhaps an invasion of right, is of little importance and the injury resulting therefrom, if any, is trifling, an application of the maxim de minimis non curat lex may prevent any recovery therefor.[47]

Lien on fees of office A sheriff's official defalcations create no lien on fees of office due to him, but debts due him on whatever account form, with his other property, a common fund for all his creditors.[48]

Judicial or ministerial functions. While the general rule of liability of a sheriff or constable applies always to breaches by a sheriff or constable of his ministerial duties,[49] ordinarily no liability can arise out of what he has done when acting in a judicial capacity,[50] even though he has acted corruptly,[51] but it has been held or said that a sheriff or constable may be subject to liability for judicial acts where he has maliciously deprived some person of his rights.[52]

a. Deputies
b. Coroners acting as sheriffs
c. De facto officers
d. Persons aiding officers

a. Deputies

A deputy of a sheriff or constable may be held personally liable for his voluntary or negligent wrongful acts.

Where a deputy of a sheriff or constable, acting in the sphere of his office, does a voluntary or negligent wrongful act, he may be held personally liable therefor, since by such act he becomes a personal wrongdoer;[53] but he incurs no personal lia-

As trespasser ab initio
Where an authority given by law is exceeded, the sheriff loses benefit of his justification and the law holds him a trespasser ab initio, although to a certain extent he acted under authority given.—Wallner v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md., 33 N.W.2d 215, 253 Wis. 66, 10 A.L.R.2d 745.

Constable acting as deputy sheriff
The fact that a person is a constable cannot shield him from liability for an act patently committed by him as a deputy sheriff.—Chaudoin v. Fuller, 192 P.2d 243, 67 Ariz. 144.

Particular acts subjecting deputy to liability
(1) Acts of trespass and assault

bility to an individual who is injured by reason of his mere official nonfeasance,[54] neglect,[55] or unintentional misfeasance,[56] since in such case the wrong is purely official and not the personal act of the deputy and hence is attributable to the sheriff alone,[57] unless the statute expressly gives a remedy against the deputy.[58] So, where a deputy sheriff collects money on an execution and pays it over to the sheriff, the deputy cannot be held liable for not paying the money to the execution plaintiff.[59] In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that, for neglect of duty by a deputy sheriff, an action will lie either against him or the sheriff.[60] A deputy sheriff who gives his receipt for notes placed in his hands to be collected thereby assumes an agency for the owner of such notes which is extra-official, and is personally liable for negligence or misconduct in the matter,[61] and a deputy sheriff who insures property in his hands as such is liable for the premium.[62]

Deputy acting as sheriff. It has been held that, where a sheriff who at the expiration of his term of office has in his hands process not fully executed dies before the complete execution thereof, his undersheriff becomes substituted in his place, assumes all his liabilities in respect of such process, and is personally liable for moneys collected by him thereunder.[63]

Deputy's liability to sheriff The deputy is liable to the sheriff for nonfeasance and unintentional misfeasance as well as for wilful misfeasance;[64] but no liability exists where the deputy is not in default[65] or where the sheriff is in pari delicto with the deputy.[66] A sheriff may maintain an action against his deputy for the latter's failure to pay over money collected by him without a demand.[67] Where a sheriff, sued for an alleged default of his deputy, makes no defense, and gives the deputy no notice of the proceedings, in consequence of which judgment is rendered which is erroneous as to the law and unjust as to the merits, the sheriff cannot recover the amount of the judgment from the deputy.[68]

Liability of deputy for acts of other deputies. Deputy sheriffs cannot, as a general rule, be held liable for matters beyond their own sphere of activity,[69] and thus they cannot be held liable for acts of other deputies over whom they have no authority.[70]

b. Coroners Acting as Sheriffs

The liabilities of a coroner acting as a sheriff are the same as those of the sheriff.

Where a coroner acts as sheriff as considered supra § 32, his liabilities are the same as those of the sheriff.[71]

Coroner acting as sheriff on execution directed to him is estopped to deny his authority.—Longacre v. State, supra.

c. De Facto Officers

A de facto sheriff or constable is subject to the same liability for his wrongful acts as a rightful incumbent of the office.

One who has acted as a sheriff, deputy, or constable under such circumstances as to make him an officer de facto, as considered supra §§ 12, 20, 28, is subject to the same liability for official misfeasance or nonfeasance as though he were the rightful incumbent of the office;[72] and in addition to this he may be held liable for acts which would impose no liability were he the rightful incumbent, under the rule that one who justifies his acts under his official character puts his title in issue and must establish his right to the office in order to escape liability.[73]

d. Persons Aiding Officers

A stranger who assists a sheriff or constable in the lawful execution of process incurs no liability thereby, but a stranger who aids the officer in an unlawful act knowing of its unlawfulness is liable to the person injured thereby.

A stranger who comes to the aid of a sheriff or constable in the lawful execution of process incurs no liability thereby,[74] although the subsequent acts or omissions of the officer are such as to make the officer a trespasser ab initio.[75] However, where the original act of the officer is unlawful in itself, any stranger who aids him in it,[76] knowing its unlawfulness,[77] is liable to the person injured thereby, although he acts at the officer's command.[78] On the other hand, if such aid is extended on the command of the officer, and in ignorance of the unlawfulness of the act in which he participates, he is not liable.[79] The mere fact that an officer has committed illegal acts in the course of the execution of process can impose no liability on persons who come to his assistance after the illegal acts have been committed and without knowledge thereof, and who aid only in acts which are in themselves legal.[80] So a person who merely appraises or assists in making an inventory of goods levied on by a sheriff in obedience to the summons of the officer is not a trespasser.[81] Where plaintiff in replevin undertakes to serve the writ as the servant of the sheriff, and in doing so takes property of a third person, he is liable as a trespasser, although the sheriff might have a valid defense, since in such case he is a principal as well as a servant of the officer.[82]

§ 54. —— Effect of Directions or Interference of Party or Attorney

a. Failure to follow directions
b. Compliance with directions
c. Effect of interference of party or attorney

a. Failure to Follow Directions

As a general rule the sheriff or constable is liable to the party causing process to issue for damages resulting from a failure to follow legal directions of such party as to how the process shall be executed.

As a general rule, where the party at whose instance process is issued or his attorney directs the sheriff or constable as to how the process shall be executed,[83] and no indemnity is demanded,[84] the officer is liable for any loss resulting from his failure to follow the directions unless he could not legally have done so.[85] It is not necessary that the grounds of the direction be communicated to the officer in order to render him liable for disregarding it,[86] and the fact that his noncompliance is in good faith will not relieve him from liability.[87]

Conflicting directions. Where an execution plaintiff and his attorney give conflicting directions, the sheriff is liable if he obeys those of the attorney instead of those of the party;[88] and where the statute gives the execution defendant the right to designate the property first to be taken, if there be no reasonable doubt of title, the sheriff is not liable for failure to levy on personal property of the debtor as directed by defendant where he has levied on real estate designated by such defendant.[89]

b. Compliance with Directions

A sheriff or constable who complies with lawful directions of a party in the execution of process is relieved from liability to such party for the results of such compliance.

A sheriff or constable is relieved from liability to the party for any results proceeding from his compliance with directions of the party or his attorney with respect to the execution of process[90] unless such directions were given in ignorance of the facts;[91] and in an action against a sheriff for an escape he may rely on the fact that the attorney of plaintiff ordered defendant's discharge;[92] but the sheriff will not be relieved from liability if the order was given after the escape,[93] and an execution creditor's assent to an escape, after it has happened, and without consideration, will not discharge the sheriff from liability.[94] Directions from a person other than the party or his attorney will not excuse a sheriff for failure to perform his duty.[95] So, a direction as to certain matters in connection with the execution of a writ does not relieve the sheriff from the consequences of a neglect of duty in another respect,[96] and a direction which the party had no authority to give affords no protection whatever.[97] The fact that the officer has acted under directions of plaintiff does not relieve him of liability to defendant or others for what he has done;[98] but, although a debt has been assigned before judgment, if the judgment is rendered and execution issued in the name of the assignor, the sheriff not knowing of the assignment incurs no liability to the assignee by following the assignor's directions.[99]

Directions to stay execution. A direction from an execution plaintiff or his attorney to stay the execution of the writ will relieve the officer from liability for failure to levy,[1] or delay in levying,[2] under such execution, or for failure to arrest defendant on a body execution;[3] but a stay of "sales only," indorsed on a fieri facias, does not excuse a failure to levy,[4] and such failure is not excused by directions of the judgment creditor after assignment of the execution.[5]

Directions as to return of process. Authority or instructions from plaintiff in execution or his attorney to hold up the writ will relieve the sheriff from liability for a failure to return it;[6] but he is not excused from a failure to return an execution by reason of instructions to return it "to be renewed,"[7] or to hold up or postpone a sale after levy,[8] and authority from the judgment creditor to retain the execution beyond the return-day will not relieve him from liability for failure to hold his levy and retain possession of the property to answer the writ.[9] In like manner a failure to return will not be excused by directions of an attorney representing only one of the parties for whose benefit the execution was issued.[10] A sheriff who would otherwise be liable as bail may be relieved by the fact that his deputy returned the execution at the request and by the direction of plaintiff's attorney before the return-day thereof,[11] and a sheriff is not liable for making a false return, where he indorses such return on a writ of execution in accordance with plaintiff's directions.[12]

Necessity of written directions. Verbal directions will afford a sufficient protection to the officer[13] unless the statute requires them to be in writing.[14]

Evidence. An officer who attempts to escape liability on the ground that he acted in accordance with plaintiff's instructions has the burden of proof as to such instructions.[15]

c. Effect of Interference of Party or Attorney

The sheriff is not liable to a party for failure to perform a duty which he has been prevented from performing by such party.

Where the interference of a party or his attorney has prevented the sheriff from performing his duty, such party cannot hold the sheriff liable for such failure,[16] and a sheriff is not liable to plaintiff for an insufficient return where the delinquency is attributable to a statement of facts made to the sheriff by the agent of plaintiff,[17] but a sheriff cannot escape liability for failure to return a writ by showing that the conduct of plaintiff embarrassed him in making sales or adjusting or collecting the proceeds thereof[18]

Liability of party. If the sheriff exceeds his authority on his own instance and not on the direction of a party, the party is not responsible for such acts of excess[19]

(1) In general
(2) Applications of rule

(1) In General

As a general rule a sheriff is liable for acts, defaults, or misconduct of a deputy committed in the performance of official duties.

For all civil purposes the acts of a deputy sheriff or deputy constable are those of his principal, the sheriff or constable,[20] a deputy sheriff being the alter ego of the sheriff,[21] and his knowledge in most instances will be imputed to such principal,[22]

Delay in filing return

Where plaintiff's attorney in attachment proceeding drew deputy sheriff's return and, after it was signed by deputy, sent it out of state for service on a nonresident defendant, with result that return was not filed within the time required and attachment was thus invalidated, plaintiff could not recover from sheriff for damages resulting from invalidation of attachment, since delay in filing was due largely to conduct of plaintiff's attorney.—Summerfield v. although it is otherwise as to knowledge acquired by the deputy before his appointment.[23] Hence, in the absence of a statute relieving him from liability,[24] or providing in terms or in effect that a right of action for a specific tort shall be against the person committing it,[25] it is the general rule, sometimes by reason of statute, that a sheriff or constable is liable for the acts, defaults, or misconduct of the deputy done or committed in the performance of his official duties,[26] notwithstanding an action could not be maintained against the county.[27] His liability in this respect extends not only to acts of misfeasance but also to official nonfeasance,[28] and the fact that the deputy is mistaken as to the lawfulness of his act will not relieve the sheriff from liability.[29] The rule is particularly applicable to the acts of a special deputy appointed for a particular purpose.[30] It has been held that in order to make the sheriff liable the official act of the deputy must result in the wrong or bear some relation to the injury inflicted.[31]

The liability of a sheriff for acts of his deputy is grounded on the common law.[32] Statutes imposing

Limits on rule

A sheriff and his deputy are for many purposes regarded as one officer in law, but this rule does not extend so far as to make the sheriff chargeable with notice of all that has come to the knowledge of any of his deputies or to require impossibilities of the sheriff or to impose unconscionable exactions.—Roberts v. Amercement of sheriff for defaults of deputy see infra § 173.
Liability of sheriff on official bond for act of deputy see infra § 179.
Summary remedies against sheriff for acts of deputy see infra § 168.

Purpose of statute

By enactment of statute making the sheriff responsible for neglect of duty or misconduct in office of his deputies it was the intention of the legislature to place on the sheriff the responsibility of seeing to it that his choice of deputies be wisely made, and that trustworthy and dependable peace officers be chosen as his aids.—Hahratty v Godfrey, 184 N.E 842, 44 Ohio App. 360

Basis of liability

(1) The liability of the sheriff for the acts of his deputy has been held to be governed by the law applicable to the relationship of principal and agent.—Davis v. Moore, 2 S.E 2d 366, 215 N.C. 449.

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that the liability of a sheriff for the acts of his deputies is not based on the theory that the relationship of master and servant or principal and agent exists, but on the theory that the deputy is the representative of the sheriff, and his acts are those of the sheriff such liability on the sheriff are declaratory of the common law, not in derogation thereof,[33] and hence are not construed strictly so as to render the sheriff liable only for positive or aggressive wrongs.[34] The liability of a constable for the official acts of his deputy is the same at common law as the liability of a sheriff for the acts of his deputy,[35] and the omission of a statute declaring this liability of a sheriff to declare the similar liability of a constable does not abolish the latter's liability.[36]

Acts by virtue of office or under color of office. Sheriffs and constables are civilly liable for the acts and omissions of their deputies performed within the scope of their legal authority and by virtue of their office.[37] Some authorities hold that a sheriff or constable is liable for any act of a deputy done under color of office,[38] but other authorities hold that a sheriff or constable is liable only for acts of a deputy done by virtue of office and is not liable for acts done merely under color of office.[39] It has been variously held or stated that in order to render a sheriff or constable liable for the acts of a deputy the acts must be performed by the deputy by virtue of his office,[40] or by virtue or under color of office,[41] or both by virtue of office and under color of office.[42]

Mode of selection of deputy. The rule which imposes liability on a sheriff for acts of his deputies has been held to be inapplicable in the case of deputies who are selected from restricted lists, and who are governed by civil service regulations and city or county charters, as to acts which the sheriff has not directed or in which he has not cooperated.[43] On the other hand, the sheriff has been held liable for the tortious acts of his deputy in the performance of official duties notwithstanding a statute creating the office of the deputy or the application of a civil service statute to such office.[44] Where the law contemplates that the appointment of deputies by constables shall be voluntary and in the exercise of a free choice, the constable has been held not to be relieved of liability for acts of his deputies merely because he has no free hand in hiring and firing deputies, as where their appointment must be confirmed by a commissioners' court.[45]

Deputy as independent officer. A sheriff has been held not liable for the defaults or misconduct of deputies or bailiffs who do not act merely as his agents, but are in effect independent public officers,[46] unless, and only to the extent that, the statute renders them liable.[47]

Policemen. A sheriff has been held not to be liable for the torts of policemen appointed by him[48] unless he has been negligent in their selection,[49]

Subordinate assistants. It has been held that the doctrine of respondeat superior applicable to the relationship of master and servant, as discussed in Master and Servant §§ 561–575, does not, in the absence of statute, apply to a sheriff so as to render him liable for defaults or misfeasance of subordinate assistants[52] unless he has been negligent in their appointment or supervision.[53]

Extent of liability. While at common law a sheriff is liable for the acts of his deputy to the full amount of damage suffered,[54] this liability may be limited by statute.[55]

(2) Applications of Rule

The liability of a sheriff or constable for acts or omissions of his deputy may include liability for assaults committed by the deputy while performing the duties of the office, reckless or wanton acts while making an arrest, negligence in caring for and protecting prisoners, failure to serve process, failure to return a writ, and many other acts or omissions of the deputy.

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the liability of a sheriff or constable for the acts of his deputy extends to those acts of a deputy which involve an abuse of power reposed in him.[56] Under the circumstances of the case, a sheriff or constable has been held liable for particular acts of a deputy,[57] such as an assault committed by the deputy while performing the duties of the office,[58] negligent, reckless, or wanton acts while making an arrest[59] or preventing the escape of persons arrested,[60] false imprisonment or wrongful arrest,[61] negligence in caring for and protecting prisoners in his custody,[62] negligently allowing a prisoner to escape,[63] and wrongfully taking money or extorting illegal fees.[64] pass[68] committed in enforcing legal process.

Return of process. A sheriff or constable is liable for the deputy's failure to return a writ,[69] making a premature return by reason of which the party is damaged,[70] and making a false[71] or improper[72] return.

Levy on, or other taking of, property, and sale thereof. The deputy's failure to make a levy according to the mandate of a writ is a default for which the sheriff or constable is liable[73] unless such failure is justified;[74] and liability also attaches to the deputy's failure on receiving an execution to make a demand on attaching officer so as to fix his liability,[75] making a wrongful levy on, or other taking of, property under color of legal process,[76] taking possession of goods under a void execution,[77] releasing an attachment,[78] failure to sell goods levied on,[79] giving erroneous information as to the place of sale,[80] a sale of property under a defective execution,[81] or a sale of property of a third person with knowledge of such person's claim thereto.[82]

Collection, custody, and disposition of money or property. A sheriff or constable is liable for the defaults or negligence of the deputy with respect to the care of property in his official custody,[83] loss through the deputy's negligence of property levied on by him and in his possession,[84] the release of property on an invalid claim of exemption,[85] failure or refusal of the deputy to pay over money collected by him,[86] or to apply money received from sales of property attached to the satisfaction of executions issued on judgments obtained by the attaching creditors.[87] Where a deputy sheriff receives an execution commanding, not his principal, but the sheriff of another county, to make the money for which the process issues, and proceeds to collect the money, he becomes possessed of it under color or by virtue of his office, and the sheriff is liable to plaintiff therefor.[88] A sheriff has also been held liable for money paid into the hands of a clerk in his office who embezzled it.[89]

Taking insufficient bond or security. Where a deputy takes insufficient bail[90] or an insufficient bond in replevin[91] the sheriff is liable to the person injured thereby.

b. Acts outside Scope of Official Duties

As a general rule a sheriff is not liable for acts of his deputy outside the scope of his official duties.

Mo.—Humphrey v. Ownby, App., 104 S.W.2d 398.
57 C.J. p. 801 note 15.

Reason for rule

Sheriff is responsible for wrongs of deputy sheriff only when he acts officially, since deputy is public officer and not servant or agent of sheriff in private sense.—Humphrey v. Ownby, supra.

Unauthorized unofficial acts of deputy do not render sheriff liable.—Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Clark, 150 S.W.2d 78, 136 Tex. 238—Sheppard v. Gill, Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 168, affirmed 90 S.W.2d 563, 126 Tex. 603—Graves v. Buzbee, Tex.Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 392.

Usurpation of power

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the sheriff is not liable for acts of his deputy in-him officially to perform.[93] In other words, a sheriff or constable is not responsible for a wrongful act of his deputy unless such act was done in violation of an official duty or was an unfaithful or improper performance of an official act.[94] Authorization, participation, or ratification by the sheriff may subject him to liability for an act outside the scope of the deputy's duties,[95] but it has been held that the fact that an unofficial act was done by the deputy sheriff in the belief that it was within his official power, and that the sheriff, on being informed of it, approved it, and afterward acted on it, in the same belief, will not render the latter liable.[96] Where a sheriff delivered a fieri facias to a deputy sheriff, with written directions to make a levy and await further orders from the execution plaintiff, thereby severing the relationship of principal and deputy, and making the deputy plaintiff's agent, the sheriff was held not answerable for the deputy's subsequent acts or defaults.[97] A sheriff cannot be held liable for the breach of an unofficial or unauthorized contract made by his deputy.[98]

Application of rule. Under the particular circumstances of the case, in the application of the rule that a sheriff or constable is not liable for the acts of his deputy outside the scope of his official duties, the sheriff or constable has been held not to be liable for failure of a deputy, who has undertaken to secure an alias execution, to secure it in time to be available,[99] for failure to record the levy of an execution,[1] for failure to turn over money not received by the deputy in the line of his official duties,[2] for acceptance of service of a notice of a claim to property levied on,[3] for executing an order of a justice of the peace for the removal of an obstruction in a town way or private way,[4] for a search and seizure without a lawful warrant or other authority,[5] for an unlawful imprisonment,[6] for a malicious prosecution,[7] for an arrest without a warrant or other legal authority[8] or an injury or death inflicted by the deputy while making such arrest,[9] for an assault on a person under arrest, not volving a usurpation of power—Swenson v. Cahoon, 152 So. 203, 111 Fla. 788

Agreement by group of deputies to make an arrest which is unauthorized will not make the sheriff liable for acts of his deputies unless deputies were acting within their authority under law authorizing such an arrest.—Malone v. Howell, 192 So. 224, 140 Fla. 693.

Person's approach to an unlawful liquor still, in absence of other circumstances, was not such conduct as would authorize his arrest without a warrant on theory that he had committed crime in presence of deputy sheriffs guarding still, with respect

made in discharge of any duty of the deputy,[10] for a malicious killing,[11] or for the killing of a person by a deputy holding a warrant for arrest, but before announcing that he held a warrant;[12] and it has been held that a deputy who, while fleeing from a person whom he is called to arrest, shot and killed one of his own party was not acting within his official authority so as to make the sheriff liable,[13] unless, of course, the latter was present aiding and abetting the act.[14]

Where a special deputy, without the knowledge or direction of the sheriff, voluntarily procured a "John Doe" warrant and, in attempting to make an arrest, shot a bystander, the sheriff was not liable [15] It has also been held that where a sheriff was not present when his deputies killed a person in the execution of a writ, and they acted, in the killing, on their own initiative, the liability of the sheriff, if any, could not be enforced in an action for wrongful death [16] The representations of a deputy sheriff at an execution sale that the title to the property is clear and all right, made under the belief that they are true, will not bind the sheriff so as to render him liable to the purchaser for failure of title.[17] So, where under the law the sheriff has nothing to do with the collection of taxes until executions have been issued and delivered to him, he is not liable for taxes collected by a deputy before the issuance and delivery of execution, where such deputy embezzles the money so collected.[18] Other cases illustrating the rule that a sheriff or constable is not liable for the acts of a deputy outside the line of his official duties appear in the note [19]

c. Acts of de Facto Deputies

A sheriff or constable generally is held liable for official misconduct of a de facto deputy.

A sheriff or constable generally is liable for the official misconduct, defaults, etc, of a de facto deputy,[20] that is, a person whom the sheriff or constable has held out as his deputy,[21] and who has acted as a deputy[22] with the consent of the sheriff or constable,[23] although such person may not have been legally appointed a deputy[24] or may not have

Acts growing out of conspiracy

Where deputy sheriff and others conspired to get a wife to return to her husband by having deputy, who was commissioned in another parish, serve a false warrant for her arrest, and while carrying out the conspiracy one of conspirators shot and killed third person, sheriff who had commissioned the deputy was not liable to third person's widow for his death, since deputy was not acting with official authority —Davis v. McDowell, La App, 185 So 634.

Deputy sheriff acting as marshal

Under evidence that village mayor appointed deputy sheriff to act as town marshal in absence of regular marshal, that appointee's duties as deputy sheriff did not embrace that of maintaining order in dance halls of village, that he performed such duty only when he was designated to act in place of town marshal, that deputy arrested deceased at dance hall and carried him to village jail, and that deceased attempted to escape and was shot by deputy, sheriff was not liable regardless of whether deputy recklessly or maliciously shot deceased —Simoneaux v. Gonzales, La App, 4 So 2d 35.

Deputies working for county commissioners

Where a county, through the county commissioners, was working a prisoner in the county jail, the sheriff was held not liable for his deputy's negligence, if any, resulting in the death of the prisoner, because the deputy was working for the commissioners and not for the sheriff —Kebert v. Board of Com'rs of Wilson County, 5 P.2d 1085, 134 Kan 401.

qualified in the manner required by statute.[25] However, it has been held that a sheriff is not liable for the wrongful acts of a person claiming to act as his deputy, but that the authority to act as such deputy must be established by producing a written appointment.[26]

d. Acts Done after Termination of Office

The sheriff is liable for acts of a deputy done in connection with the execution of process begun while the deputy was still in office, notwithstanding the wrong occurred after the deputy was no longer in office, or for acts of the deputy in the execution of process placed in his hands while the sheriff was in office, notwithstanding the wrong complained of occurred after the sheriff had gone out of office.

Where a deputy ceases to be such, as by removal, expiration of term, or otherwise, the sheriff is liable for his subsequent acts in connection with the execution of process which he had begun to execute while in office,[27] but the sheriff is not liable for any acts of the former deputy in connection with new business which he has assumed to undertake after ceasing to be deputy.[28]

Termination of sheriff's incumbency. Where a sheriff, while in office, places process in the hands of his deputy for execution, he is liable for the official misfeasance or nonfeasance of the deputy with respect to such process, although the act or omission complained of does not occur until after the sheriff has gone out of office,[29] and the deputy has become the deputy of his successor.[30] So it has been held that although his term of office has expired, and he has made a final settlement with his deputy, a sheriff is liable for the deputy's default in withdrawing from a solvent bank, public money necessary to pay checks given to the holder of orders.[31]

e. Acts of Deputy of Predecessor

A sheriff is not liable for acts of the deputy of his predecessor with respect to process placed in the deputy's hands by such predecessor.

A sheriff is not responsible for the acts or omissions of the deputy of his predecessor with respect to process placed in his hands for execution by the prior sheriff,[32] although the new sheriff has appointed the same person his own deputy[33] and the acts or omissions complained of did not occur until after the new sheriff had gone into office.[34]

f. Acts of Deputy Nominated by Creditor

The mere fact that the deputy sheriff was appointed to office at the good-faith nomination of the execution creditor has been held not to relieve the sheriff of liability to such creditor for the misconduct of such deputy.

It has been held that the mere fact that a special deputy to execute certain process was appointed by the sheriff on the nomination of the creditor does not relieve the sheriff from liability to the creditor for the misconduct or neglect of such deputy[35] unless there was collusion or a want of good faith in making the nomination.[36] So it has been held that the sheriff is not relieved from liability for the default of a deputy levying an attachment because the deputy was appointed for the purpose at the request of plaintiff in attachment.[37]

g. Direction to Deputy as Affecting Liability of Sheriff

The sheriff is not liable for acts of the deputy in executing a writ in compliance with the instructions of the plaintiff or his attorney.

Where plaintiff in a writ gives instructions to a deputy sheriff as to its execution, and such instructions are followed, the sheriff is discharged from liability for the deputy's acts on the ground that plaintiff has made the deputy his agent,[38] and this is also true where the deputy acts under the instructions of the attorney of such party,[39] but the mere fact that plaintiff has given instructions to a deputy does not affect the liability of the sheriff for the deputy's acts where the deputy has done nothing in pursuance of such instructions[40] or where the default complained of was not committed in the course of following such directions.[41]

h. Release from Duty or Liability

A creditor who has released the deputy from performance of his duty cannot hold the sheriff liable for the deputy's neglect of such duty.

A creditor who has by his own act released the deputy from the obligation to perform his legal duty cannot hold the sheriff liable for the deputy's neglect.[42] It has been held that where the owner of goods wrongfully levied on brings trespass against the deputy and recovers judgment and takes out execution, the sheriff is discharged of his responsibility,[43] but where a deputy, relying on defendant in an execution to pay it, and for his special accommodation, has suffered the execution to run out in his hands, and the consequent liability of the sheriff has become fixed, the mere passive acquiescence of plaintiff in a further delay in order to give time to the deputy and defendant in the execution to make the money does not ipso facto operate as a release of the cause of action against the sheriff.[44]

B. DEFAULTS AND WRONGFUL ACTS IN EXECUTION OF PROCESS

§ 56. Defaults in General

As a general rule a sheriff or constable is liable for damages resulting from his failure to execute process delivered to him for execution.

As a general rule, a sheriff or constable to whom process has been delivered for execution is liable for failure to serve or execute it,[45] for any damage which may have resulted from his negligence, or default in the execution of the process,[46] or from delay in proceeding to execute it.[47] Matters affecting or relieving the sheriff or constable from liability for his failure or default in the execution of process are considered infra § 60.

Necessity for demand. A demand is not a prerequisite to an action against a sheriff for a default in respect of the execution of process.[48]

Particular process or writs. The liability of the sheriff for failure to execute, or negligence or delay in the service or execution of process, extends to summonses,[49] subpœnas,[50] attachments,[51] executions against property,[52] writs of possession, such as writs of assistance,[53] writs of replevin,[54] writs of restitution,[55] body executions,[56] and warrants of arrest.[57]

a. Recognizing Claim of Exemption

As a general rule the sheriff is not liable to an execution creditor for recognizing a claim of exemption made by the debtor.

A sheriff is not liable to an execution creditor for recognizing a claim of exemption made by the debtor[58] except in case of a formal waiver[59] or a willful and wanton disregard of the creditor's plain rights.[60] However, the fact that a defendant, against whom execution has been issued, is absent and cannot be notified thereof, so as to claim his exemption, does not excuse the sheriff for a failure to levy.[61]

b. Giving Preference to Junior Writ

As a general rule, a sheriff who improperly gives preference to the junior of two writs in his hands for execution is liable to the plaintiff in the senior writ for resulting loss.

A sheriff who, having two or more writs in his hands for execution, improperly gives preference to a junior writ, is liable to plaintiff in the senior writ if his debt is thereby lost or the amount which he would otherwise have received diminished[62] unless the junior writ is more specific.[63] If the giving of such preference results in a seizure of the property of a surety of defendant in the writs, who was surety for only the debt represented by the senior writ, and hence would not have been compelled to pay the sum had the proper order of precedence been observed, the sheriff is liable to such surety.[64]

c. Failure to File Statutory Notice; Demand

A sheriff levying an attachment is liable for damage resulting from his negligent failure to file the requisite statutory notice.

A sheriff levying an attachment on land is liable for the resulting damage where the debt is lost by reason of his negligent omission to file a notice required by statute in such cases,[65] and the fact that the sheriff files a notice at the request of plaintiff's attorney after a conveyance of the land to a bona fide purchaser, and after rendition of judgment in the attachment suit, does not defeat plaintiff's right of action against him for the original default.[66] The sheriff cannot, by interposing as a defense a suggestion that the deed is invalid, and that the purchaser had actual notice, compel plaintiff, in effect, to litigate with such purchaser the validity of his deed.[67]

Demand. Although ordinarily no demand need be made by the sheriff on the possessor of the property before acting under an execution in ejectment or other writ for the possession of property,[68] the sheriff may be liable for damages from failure to make the demand if such failure would of itself subject the possessor to unreasonable hardship or loss and it is reasonably possible to make the demand.[69]

§ 58. —— Failure to Arrest Defendant

A sheriff may be liable for damages resulting from a failure to arrest a defendant on civil process.

A sheriff may be held liable in damages for a negligent failure to arrest a defendant on civil process.[70] However, where a person at liberty under bail was arrested and placed in jail under another charge, and while so confined a surety on the bail bond indorsed on a certified copy of the bond a direction to the sheriff to "execute this process" on the prisoner, it was held that the officer sufficiently performed his duty by reading the copy to him, without having him rearrested or taking a receipt from the jailer, and was not liable to the bail sureties where the prisoner afterward escaped and the bail was forfeited.[71]

§ 59. —— Insufficient or Defective Levy

A sheriff may be liable for failure to seize sufficient available property to satisfy the debt.

The sheriff is liable to the party at whose instance process was issued, where, in making the levy thereunder, he fails to seize so much of defendant's goods as a reasonable and prudent man would deem sufficient to satisfy the debt and costs if so much is available;[72] but if the property is sufficient when levied on the sheriff does not become liable because of a subsequent depreciation in its value[73] unless the depreciation is such as a prudent man should have foreseen and provided for[74] Where he levies on property, which would satisfy the judgment were it sold for bank notes, but would be insufficient were it sold for specie, the officer is not chargeable with a breach of duty unless he was notified that specie alone would be received[75] Where the officer levies on property which ought in the estimation of a prudent person to produce sufficient to satisfy the writ, but the sale thereof proves unproductive, and he immediately levies on other property of sufficient value to satisfy the writ, he has shown sufficient diligence, and is not liable for failure to make the money, although the property last seized cannot be sold until after the return-day[76]

Property described in petition. A sheriff levying execution is liable for damages resulting from his failure to seize all the property described in the petition of the execution plaintiff.[77]

Defective levy. A sheriff is liable to the party at whose instance process was issued, where, in executing it, he makes a levy so defective that property which might have been secured to satisfy the debt is lost to the creditor.[78] Thus a sheriff levying execution is liable for damages resulting from his failure to take the property into his own possession and exercise dominion over it;[79] and if he attaches goods and neglects to remove them he is liable to plaintiff in the event a subsequent creditor attaches the same goods[80]

a. In General

The failure of a sheriff or constable to execute process does not impose on him an absolute liability, but he may escape liability by showing that the circumstances are not such as to impute to him official negligence or misconduct or that his negligence or misconduct was not the proximate cause of the damage.

The failure of a sheriff or constable to execute process does not impose on him an absolute liability, but he may escape liability by showing that the circumstances are not such as to impute to him official negligence or misconduct[81] or that his negligence or misconduct was not the proximate cause of the damage.[82] Since the officer is required only to use reasonable diligence in the execution of process, as considered supra § 44, he is not liable unless he has been lacking in such degree of diligence.[83] A sheriff or constable will not be liable for not executing a writ before the return-day[84] unless there were special circumstances making it his duty to do so;[85] and the burden is on plaintiff to show such special circumstances[86] So a party who seeks to hold a sheriff liable for damages resulting from failure to serve a citation sooner than ordinary diligence would have required,[87] as where earlier service was necessary to prevent prescription of the claim,[88] must show that the officer was notified of such necessity.

A sheriff cannot be held liable for a failure to levy on particular property pointed out by the execution plaintiff when he levies on other property of the execution defendant sufficient to satisfy the execution;[89] and where a writ of attachment is issued to a county other than the one in which the action was brought the officer executing the writ, in the manner provided by statute, is not liable for damages because, subsequently to the levy, the land was sold by the owner to an innocent purchaser, whereby plaintiff in attachment lost his security for the payment of his judgment.[90] Where an officer had no authority to execute a writ, he cannot be held liable for a failure to do so.[91]

Various circumstances relied on to relieve a sheriff or constable from liability for defects or defaults in the execution of process have been held insufficient for that purpose.[92] The fact that the sheriff had no corrupt or bad intentions does not relieve him from liability for failure to serve or execute process.[93] So a sheriff is not excused from a default in levying an execution because he delayed in reliance on the debtor's promise to pay,[94] or because of threats of bankruptcy proceedings,[95] even though he was prompted by a sincere desire to serve creditors' interests and an honest belief that he was doing so.[96] An attachment against an execution plaintiff does not relieve the sheriff from liability for failure to collect the execution placed in his hands.[97] Where a sheriff has failed to attach property, and before judgment in the suit such property has gone beyond the reach of process, the issuance of an execution within the time after the judgment for which an attachment lien remains in effect is not necessary to fix the liability of the sheriff.[98]

Absence of debtor. A sheriff is not liable for failure to serve process on a nonresident where he has followed the directions of plaintiff and failed to find defendant.[99] So, in an action against a sheriff for failure to arrest an execution defendant, the sheriff may show that such defendant was out of the county from the date of the writ until he applied for the benefit of the bankruptcy law.[1]

Affidavit of illegality. Where a sheriff holds several executions against the same defendant, an affidavit of illegality as to one does not excuse him from proceeding with the rest.[2]

Consideration for debtor. It is no excuse for the default of a sheriff in levying an execution that he delayed because the sickness of the debtor or the distress of his family;[3] but in a case where an attachment was issued against a life tenant for disobedience of a decree requiring him to give security for the principal intrusted to him, and the writ which ordered him to be brought before the court was placed in the hands of the assistant sheriff, with instructions to execute it, and, finding him so ill that he could not be moved, he procured a physician's certificate as to his condition, and made return of the facts, and the court made no further order in the matter, and no further application was made to it, it was held that the sheriff was not liable to the remainderman as for a neglect of duty.[4]

Difficulty in executing process. Difficulty in obtaining possession of property on which the sheriff is directed to levy does not excuse his failure to levy,[5] and it is not any excuse to a sheriff for failing to execute a capias ad satisfaciendum that he and his deputies had always found difficulty in arresting defendant in execution.[6]

b. Regularity and Validity of Proceedings, Judgment, and Process

lieve the sheriff of liability for failure to execute the process; but it is otherwise if the judgment or process is absolutely void.

A sheriff or constable is liable for his default in the execution of process notwithstanding defects or irregularities in the proceeding in which the process was issued,[7] where the court has jurisdiction of the cause,[8] and he cannot escape liability on the ground that prior to the entry of judgment the parties agreed to dismiss the cause and that thereafter plaintiff took judgment and caused the execution to issue.[9] On the other hand, a sheriff or constable is not liable for failure to levy on an execution in an action in which the court had no jurisdiction.[10] It has been held that a sheriff is not liable for refusal to deliver a bail bond to the creditor or to return it to the clerk's office, after returning that he had arrested the debtor and taken bail, where the affidavit accompanying the writ was not sufficient to justify an arrest.[11]

Validity and force of judgment. A sheriff or constable is not liable for failure to serve a writ which, although regular on its face, is based on a void judgment,[12] or for failure to levy and sell under an execution based on a judgment which was dormant when the writ was placed in his hands.[13] However, it is no excuse for a sheriff's failure to levy an execution on a judgment that the judgment is irregular[14] or erroneous,[15] or that the consideration therefor has failed[16]

Validity of process A sheriff or constable is not liable for failure to serve process which is void on its face,[17] and, even though a writ be regular on its face, if it is in fact unauthorized and void the sheriff is not liable for refusing to execute it.[18] It has also been held that the officer has a right to demand that process shall be in strict accordance with the statute, and that he is not liable for failure to execute a writ which fails to comply with statutory requirements.[19] However, a sheriff who has failed to execute a writ cannot escape liability by reason of a statute, enacted after his default, establishing certain requisites which the writ did not have.[20] A sheriff cannot escape liability for failure to execute or neglect or delay in executing process by reason of the fact that it is merely irregular,[21] erroneous,[22] or defective in form.[23]

c. Availability of Property for Levy or Seizure

(1) In general

(1) In General

A sheriff or constable is not liable for failure to seize property which he could not legally seize under the writ.

A sheriff or constable cannot be held liable for not seizing property which he could not legally seize under his writ,[24] as where it is in the custody of the law,[25] and in order to charge him with liability for failure to seize property under a writ it must appear that there was property of defendant available for seizure,[26] and that the officer knew of such property,[27] or had notice of facts which should

Uncertainty of amount of execution
Sheriff could not escape liability for failure to carry out the commands of a writ of execution on ground that execution was uncertain in its direction as to the amount of the judgment, interest, and costs required to be collected from judgment debtor, where principal of the judgment was named and the interest due could be easily ascertained.—Schuster v. have caused him to make a search therefor,[28] or failed to use due diligence in searching for property on which to levy.[29] It has also been held, however, that a sheriff cannot escape liability for failure to levy an execution by setting up want of knowledge of defendant having any estate or effects,[30] or showing that plaintiff did not point out to him any property on which to levy,[31] or notify him that defendant resided or had property within the county[32]

The sheriff cannot relieve himself from liability for neglect to levy an execution on goods attached by him by showing that he had previously sold them without the consent of the creditor.[33] A sale and delivery of property by an attachment debtor after the writ came to the hands of the officer does not excuse the officer from levying on such property, but he is liable if he fails to do so.[34]

Amount of property available. It is not essential to the liability of a sheriff for failure to levy under an execution that there should have been enough property of defendant available to pay the entire debt, but if he might have seized enough property to pay a part thereof and failed to do so he is liable.[35] However, if a sheriff honestly thinks that the value of property on which he can levy will not pay the expense of sale, he may refuse to levy, state the facts, and return the execution unsatisfied, although he does so at his peril, and if he is mistaken is liable to the injured party.[36] Where the sheriff seizes all the property of the debtor which can be found, he is not liable for failure to seize other property mentioned in the writ.[37]

Property in possession of sheriff. A sheriff cannot exonerate himself from failure to levy an attachment or execution on personal property by claiming to have possession of it under chattel mortgages.[38]

Property on Indian reservation. The refusal of an Indian agent to consent to entry by a sheriff on the reservation to levy execution on the property of one not an Indian does not excuse the sheriff from making the levy,[39] even though the sheriff has been advised by the United States district attorney that he has no right to enter the reservation without the agent's consent.[40]

Exempt property. A showing that property was exempt relieves the sheriff from liability for a failure to levy thereon,[41] but a mistaken belief that the property was exempt is insufficient.[42]

(2) Ownership of Property

A sheriff is not liable for failure to levy on property which does not belong to the defendant.

A sheriff is not liable for failure to levy on property which does not belong to defendant,[43] even though it was pointed out to him as defendant's property,[44] but a sheriff cannot escape liability for failure to make the money on an execution on the ground that there was a doubt as to the title to property on which he might have levied, or of an adverse claim thereto, if the property was really liable,[45] even though the property was in the possession of a third person,[46] especially if the property was shown to him as liable,[47] and he has not demanded and been refused indemnity[48] Where a mortgage is valid on its face, and the mortgagee is in possession, the sheriff is not liable for failure to levy an execution against the mortgagor of the goods, even though the mortgage is in fact fraudulent as to the execution creditor[49] So it has been held that a sheriff is not liable for failure to levy an execution issued pending the trial of the right of property under a former levy on the property as that of a third person.[50]

(3) Property Subject to Liens

The existence of prior liens on property subject to an execution will relieve a sheriff of liability for a failure to levy thereon only if the prior liens exceed the value of the property.

The mere existence of liens on property which are prior to an execution does not excuse the sheriff for a failure to levy thereon.[51] Thus, where a senior execution is stayed by agreement of the parties, the officer is liable for failure to levy under a junior execution,[52] and a levy under a prior attachment, which has been discharged, does not excuse the officer's failure to levy a subsequent attachment on the same goods.[53] A sheriff may justify a refusal to levy by showing that the property was subject to valid liens to an amount exceeding its value and prior to the writ in his hands,[54] and, where firm property has been attached in a suit against one of the partners individually, subsequent judgment creditors of the firm who have not applied to the court to set aside the attachment or to have their debts first paid out of the firm property cannot recover for the sheriff's failure to proceed under their executions.[55]

Secret deed of trust. A sheriff cannot excuse failure to levy an execution on the ground that there was an unrecorded and secret deed of trust on the goods to secure other creditors, in a sum greater than their value, and that they were subsequently disposed of and the proceeds applied to such debt.[56]

Validity of lien on which process based A sheriff cannot escape liability for a failure to levy a mortgage fieri facias on the mortgaged property on the ground that the mortgage lien is superseded in consequence of a failure to record it.[57]

d. Acts or Defaults of Party Issuing Process

(1) In general
(2) Failure or refusal to give indemnity
(3) Issuance of, or failure to issue, second writ
(4) Agreements; release of debtor or levy

(1) In General

Contributory negligence on the part of the injured party may relieve a sheriff from liability for negligence in levying under a writ.

One cannot recover from a sheriff for negligence by which an attempted levy of a writ was rendered ineffectual if he has contributed to the result by his own negligence or that of an attorney employed to supervise the procedure,[58] and where part of the loss was due to plaintiff's negligence he cannot recover for such part.[59]

A sheriff or constable is relieved from liability to the party having process issued for any results proceeding from his compliance with directions of the party or his attorney with respect to the execution of the process, as considered supra § 54. A statutory provision requiring a written direction to arrest a debtor on execution to be indorsed on the writ is for the officer's benefit and may be waived,[60] and, when such requirement is waived, noncompliance therewith by the execution plaintiff does not excuse the officer for failure to make the arrest.[61]

(2) Failure or Refusal to Give Indemnity

As a general rule failure of the party causing process to issue to provide indemnity in a proper case after a good-faith demand relieves the sheriff or constable from liability for failure to proceed under the process.

As a general rule, where the circumstances are such that the sheriff or constable is entitled to demand indemnity before proceeding to execute a writ, and he in good faith demands indemnity, which is refused, his subsequent failure to proceed subjects him to no liability to the party at whose instance the writ issued,[62] although as a matter of fact

he would have incurred no liability to any other person by proceeding [63] However, it has been held that if the execution debtor has in his possession property which is prima facie subject to the writ, and there is nothing to rebut the presumption that he owns it, the refusal of the execution creditor to give indemnity demanded by the sheriff does not relieve the officer from liability for failure to levy.[64]

In the absence of a demand for indemnity, the failure of plaintiff to furnish it does not release the sheriff from liability for failure to levy under the writ,[65] and after a default has occurred the officer cannot escape liability therefor by a subsequent demand for indemnity which is refused [66] On the other hand, it has been held that where the title to the property is in dispute, the mere failure of the officer to give notice and demand indemnity will not render him liable for failure to levy, in the absence of fraud or negligence.[67]

(3) Issuance of, or Failure to Issue, Second Writ

Where a sheriff or constable has neglected to levy an execution, the act of the plaintiff in taking out an alias execution and causing it to be levied on other property, and thus collecting part of the debt, does not deprive him of his remedy against the officer for the previous neglect.

Where a sheriff or constable has neglected to levy an execution, the act of plaintiff in taking out an alias execution and causing it to be levied on other property, and thus collecting a part of his debt, does not deprive him of his remedy against the officer for the previous neglect [68] So, where a sheriff has negligently failed to make the money on an execution, plaintiff is not deprived of his right of action against the sheriff by the fact that he has failed to proceed further against the execution defendant, although he might have made the money by so doing;[69] but where plaintiff who has recovered judgment in ejectment fails, on the expiration of the term of office of the sheriff, to place an alias writ of restitution in the hands of the new sheriff he cannot, in an action against the former sheriff for failing to execute the original writ, recover damages for any time subsequent to that at which he might have obtained possession under such alias writ [70]

(4) Agreements; Release of Debtor or Levy

Agreements between the parties suspending execution of the writ or settling the claim on which it is based, which do not discharge or satisfy the debt, do not relieve the sheriff of his liability for failure to proceed, where he has received no instructions from the plaintiff or his attorney not to proceed.

Agreements between the parties merely suspending the execution of the writ[71] or settling the claim on which it is based,[72] which do not constitute a satisfaction or discharge of the debt, do not relieve the sheriff of liability for failure to proceed with the writ, where he has received no instructions from plaintiff or his attorney not to proceed.[73]

Release or discharge of debtor. Where an execution against two defendants is placed in the hands of a sheriff, he cannot escape liability for failing to make the money merely because plaintiff has released one of defendants.[74] A judgment creditor's right of action against a sheriff for failure to levy an execution is not barred by the creditor's discharging the debtor from a capias ad satisfaciendum, although such discharge operates as a satisfaction of the judgment, where the remedy against the sheriff has been perfected before such discharge.[75]

Release of levy by creditor. A sheriff is not released from liability for failure to levy on property of the debtor out of which the money could have been made by proper diligence by the fact that plaintiff had released a levy which had been made on his own property as that of the execution defendant.[76] In like manner, the sheriff cannot properly claim to be discharged from liability because plaintiff releases a levy on property to which a claim is interposed by a third person who gives bond to try the right of property, according to the statute.[77]

e. Collectability or Payment of Debt

The fact that the debt is not collectable by exercise of due diligence by the sheriff ordinarily will relieve the sheriff of liability for failure to make a levy, as in the case of bankruptcy or insolvency of the debtor.

A sheriff cannot escape liability for failure to levy under an execution by showing that the judgment debtor is solvent and has property which may be subjected to the judgment, and that the judgment debt is thus collectable.[78] It has been held, however, that where a sheriff, ordered to attach real estate, neglects to do so, and it is conveyed by the debtor before judgment in the action, the value of other real estate owned by the debtor and remaining subject to levy, but which had not been levied on, should be allowed in reduction of damages.[79] A sheriff is relieved from liability for failure to levy, where the debt could not have been collected by due diligence,[80] or such fact may be shown in mitigation of damages.[81]

Bankruptcy or insolvency of debtor. Where a judgment is avoided by an adjudication of bankruptcy against the judgment debtor within four months after its rendition, the sheriff is not liable for a failure to make the money on an execution issued on such judgment,[82] or at most can be subjected to only nominal damages for not serving the execution, as considered infra § 61. So the insolvency of the debtor will relieve the officer for failure to serve a writ of execution,[83] or, at least, may be shown in mitigation of damages;[84] but if a sheriff, holding final process against the body of a debtor, neglects the opportunity to arrest him, and he afterward absconds, the sheriff cannot show the insolvency of such debtor in mitigation of damages.[85] Under a statute making an officer liable for failure to levy execution, when this might have been done, mere insolvency of the execution debtor is insufficient to relieve the officer from liability for such failure unless he shows that there was no property belonging to the debtor, subject to execution within the officer's jurisdiction, out of which the judgment could have been made.[86]

Payment of debt. An officer may show, as an excuse for not making the money on an execution placed in his hands, that the amount has been paid to the execution plaintiff,[87] and payment after return of the writ is sufficient to relieve the officer from liability.[88] If a part of the execution has been paid the sheriff's liability is decreased pro tanto.[89]

f. Prevention of Execution of Process by Bond, Supersedeas, Stay, or Injunction

As a general rule the sheriff is not liable for his failure to execute process in his hands where he was prevented from so doing by a valid bond, stay order, or injunction.

Where the statute allows a defendant in attachment to prevent a levy by giving bond, a sheriff who omits to make a levy on such bond being given is not liable therefor,[90] although plaintiff in attachment is unable to collect his full claim on the bond.[91]

Supersedeas or stay of writ. A sheriff's failure to levy an execution on a day named, as peremptorily directed by the judgment creditor's attorney, cannot be excused by any judicial order staying the execution served on the sheriff after that day,[92] although such subsequent order, acquiesced in by the execution plaintiff, would be a good defense to an attachment of the sheriff for contempt, as considered infra § 171. A stay law which has expired before an execution is placed in a sheriff's hands cannot excuse his failure to levy,[93] and where, while a statute known as the "stay law" was considered in force, plaintiffs in a fieri facias notified the sheriff that a judgment was recovered against defendant as bail, which was one of the excepted cases in the statute to which it did not apply, and directed him to proceed to make the money by a levy, it was held to be no excuse for his refusal to levy that the fieri facias did not show on its face that the case was within the exception.[94]

A sheriff is not justified in refusing to levy an execution, because he has been served with notice of appeal and of the filing of an undertaking staying proceedings on the judgment unless the appeal has been duly perfected and the undertaking on which the stay is claimed is in due form;[95] but a constable is excused for not serving an execution issued by the justice, where the justice has gone to him and withdrawn the execution in consequence of a certiorari delivered to him, although no bail was entered on taking out the certiorari.[96] Where a sheriff, on a capias ad satisfaciendum being placed in his hands, received the amount of the debt and costs from defendant, and gave his receipt, stipulating to return the money if an injunction to restrain further proceedings should be obtained, and the injunction was obtained, and he returned the money, he was held not to be liable to an attachment for having failed to execute the capias ad satisfaciendum.[97] It is no excuse for failure to levy an execution that defendant in execution falsely represented that he had taken a stay of, or appeal from, the judgment on which it issued.[98]

Injunction against process. The fact that the execution of process has been enjoined relieves the sheriff of liability for failure to execute it,[99] even, it has been held, where the execution was in his hands several years before a perpetual injunction was granted.[1] On the other hand, it has been held that the officer is not relieved from liability by an injunction which was without merit, and which did not in fact prevent the officer from making the money on the execution,[2] as where the officer's neglect of duty occurred before the injunction issued.[3]

g. Injury to Party at Whose Instance Process Issued

Ordinarily, unless actual pecuniary damage is shown, a sheriff is not liable for not executing or not properly executing a writ.

Ordinarily, unless actual pecuniary damage is shown, a sheriff is not liable for not executing or not properly executing a writ,[4] or at most is liable only to nominal damages, as considered infra § 61. So under a statute making a sheriff liable to plaintiff in execution for failure or refusal to levy on or sell property liable to execution, no liability attaches where no injury has been sustained.[5] Moreover, mere neglect of duty by the sheriff cannot give rise to a cause of action where injury may or may not result, depending on the conjectural and undeterminable action of some third person;[6] and hence failure to serve notice of the expiration of time for redemption from tax sale does not entitle the holder of the tax certificate to sue the sheriff for the value of the land, since it cannot be known that redemption would have been made had notice been served.[7]

§ 61. Extent of Liability

a. Failure to execute process
b. Giving preference to junior writ
c. Insufficient or defective levy

a. Failure to Execute Process

The liability of a sheriff or constable for failure to execute process ordinarily is limited to the injury actually sustained by the party having the process issued.

A sheriff or constable who fails to execute, or properly to execute, process is prima facie liable for the amount of the debt or judgment[8] or the value of the property if that be less than the amount of the judgment,[9] together with interest[10] and costs,[11] although it has been held that interest is not allowable for refusal to execute a writ where no pecuniary benefit has, or could have, accrued to the officer through his default[12] or where no demand was made on him for the money claimed.[13] The officer may reduce his liability by showing that his default was not the real cause of the loss,[14] as in a case where the debt could not have been collected in any event, as considered supra § 60 e, so that his ultimate liability is only for the injury actually sustained by reason of his default,[15] unless his default has been willful.[16] So, where it appears that there was property of defendant which might have been levied on and the value of which equaled or exceeded the debt, the officer is liable for the entire debt,[17] but where such property was worth less than the amount of the debt the officer is liable for only the value of the property at the time it should have been seized.[18] In some cases the cash value of the property which might have been seized, and not a fluctuating auction price, has been held to be the measure of damages,[19] while in others it has been held that the measure of the sheriff's liability is the amount which the property not levied on would have brought if sold at public sale to the highest and best bidder.[20]

Liability on final and mesne process distinguished, bail trover. In some jurisdictions it has been held that, while the sheriff's liability for failure to execute, or his default in executing, final process is presumptively the amount of the execution,[21] his liability for failure to execute ordinary mesne process is only the amount of actual damages sustained by the creditor,[22] and that, where the officer fails without good excuse to render services legally incumbent on him in executing (mesne) bail process in a trover case, he must respond to plaintiff in damages for whatever amount the services, if faithfully performed, would have been worth in the proceeding in which they were due,[23] which is the eventual condemnation money.[24] Damages for failure to execute bail and trover process, although reducible by funds derived from a sale of the property under a subsequent common-law levy,[25] cannot be so reduced where the property when sold under the levy was insufficient to pay costs.[26]

Nominal damages. If there has been no actual loss from a default in the execution of process, plaintiff is entitled to no more than nominal damages.[27] Accordingly, only nominal damages can be recovered against a sheriff for refusing to levy on and sell property on executions against the mortgagor where the amount of the mortgages exceeds the value of the property.[28] So, where neither the body nor any property of an execution defendant was within the territorial jurisdiction of an officer during the time the execution was in his hands, only nominal damages can be recovered against the officer for failure to execute the process,[29] and where the judgment has been avoided by an adjudication in bankruptcy, nominal damages, at most, can be recovered for failure of the sheriff to make the money on an execution issued on such judgment.[30]

b. Giving Preference to Junior Writ

For wrongfully giving precedence to a junior writ the sheriff has been held liable to the holder of the senior writ for the amount which the latter would have received but for such wrong.

It has been held that a sheriff who improperly gives precedence to a junior writ is liable to the holder of the senior writ for the amount which he would have received had the officer done his duty;[31] but other authorities have held that the proper measure of damages is the value of the goods at the time of the sale, and not the difference between the price obtained and that which could have been obtained by a sale under the senior lien.[32] If the act of the officer results in the property of a surety of the execution defendant as to the debt represented by the senior writ being seized, whereas, but for the sheriff's wrongful act, the surety would not have been compelled to pay the debt, the surety is entitled to recover from the sheriff an amount equal to the value of as much of the debtor's property as was wrongfully applied on the junior writ,[33] unless the execution defendant's effects were insufficient to satisfy the senior execution,[34] in which case the officer is liable only for as much of the property as sold for the sum which the effects of the principal brought, and not for what would have been in any event required to make up a deficiency on the execution for which the surety was liable as such.[35]

c. Insufficient or Defective Levy

As a general rule, for negligently making an insufficient or defective levy the sheriff or constable is liable only to the extent of the actual damage caused thereby.

Where a sheriff or constable negligently makes an insufficient levy, by reason of which a part of the debt is lost, the prima facie measure of damages is the difference between the amount named in the writ, with costs, and the amount realized from a sale of the goods seized,[36] and the officer cannot be held liable for the full amount of the execution unless that measures the injury;[37] but if it is not shown that the omitted goods were of any value, only nominal damages can be recovered.[38] A sheriff who makes a levy so defective that the property is lost to the execution creditor is liable for all the resulting damage.[39] If the debtor had no title to the property at the time of the defective levy, the officer is not liable for the amount of the debt,[40] but only for nominal damages.[41]

§ 62. Wrongful Acts Committed in Execution of Process

a. Abuse of process and other tortious acts in general

c. Entry on, or breaking into, premises

a. Abuse of Process and Other Tortious Acts in General

A sheriff or constable is liable for damages resulting from his unauthorized or wrongful acts done under color of executing process.

A sheriff or constable is liable for damages resulting from his unauthorized or wrongful acts done under color of executing process,[42] as where he commits an assault,[43] unlawfully injures property,[44] or arrests and imprisons a citizen, and while holding him under duress illegally seizes and takes away and disposes of his property.[45] Where a constable arrests defendant immediately on receiving an execution, without searching or inquiring for property, he does so at his peril,[46] and if it is shown that defendant had property in his open and visible possession, which was subject to execution, and might with reasonable diligence have been found, he will be liable for making the arrest.[47] Where a constable arrested a debtor under an execution, and also on the same day seized certain goods, chattels, and wearing apparel of the debtor, but wholly neglected to render an account of the moneys arising from the sale of such goods, or to indorse them as a credit on the execution, by reason whereof the debtor was kept in jail until he paid the whole of the debt, interest, and costs, without any credit for the goods, the officer was held liable to the debtor for the injury.[48] However, it has been held that where a defendant's Christian name is erroneously stated in process against him, but such process is served on the person intended and he does not plead the misnomer in abatement, but suffers judgment by default, he cannot hold the officer liable for arresting him under final process in which the misnomer also appears.[49]

Committing debtor to jail other than that nearest residence. Where there are several jails in the county to which a sheriff may lawfully commit a debtor arrested on civil process, he is not guilty of oppression or abuse of authority rendering him liable to the debtor where he commits the debtor to the jail farthest from his residence, although the debtor requests that he be committed to a nearer jail.[50]

Defeating execution. Where a constable received an execution, and without the consent of the creditor delivered it to another officer, and then gave information of it to the debtor, who in consequence thereof avoided the execution, the constable was held liable to the creditor for the damages sustained by him.[51]

Delay in removal of attached property from leased premises. While the failure of an officer who has attached a tenant's property to remove it from the leased premises, within a reasonable time, is an invasion of the tenant's rights,[52] it does not render the officer liable to the landlord for rent,[53] and, the tenancy being still in existence, a promise by the officer to the landlord to pay the rent is unenforceable.[54]

Peaceable retaking. If, after one person's property has been seized under an attachment against another, the rightful owner can quietly and peaceably take possession of such property, he is entitled to retain such possession, and the officer who levied on such property is not justified in using forcible means to regain possession thereof.[55]

Purchase of debtor's property. While an execution is in the hands of a sheriff for levy, he may not buy the property of the execution debtor to the prejudice of the creditor.[56]

Refusal to release debtor. Under a statute providing that no man's person shall be arrested and imprisoned for any debt where sufficient means of satisfaction can otherwise lawfully be found from his estate, to be shown and presented by him, a constable who, on demand, is refused property to satisfy an execution, and thereupon arrests defendant, is not liable because he subsequently refuses to release the debtor on the receipt of chattels sufficient to satisfy the execution.[57]

b. Causing Unnecessary Injury or Hardship

Execution of process at such improper time and in such improper manner as willfully to cause unnecessary injury or hardship may render the sheriff liable.

Where a sheriff executes process at such an improper time and in such an improper manner as willfully to cause unnecessary injury or hardship, he may be held liable therefor;[58] and if the manner of executing the process causes physical and mental suffering the officer is liable for actual damages based thereon,[59] and for punitive damages where he acted maliciously and oppressively,[60] but no recovery can be had because of the manner of executing a writ if it results in no actual damage.[61] A sheriff does not become a trespasser ab initio by doing slight injury to a building while exercising reasonable care in removing machinery therefrom in executing a writ of attachment.[62]

c. Entry on, or Breaking into, Premises

A sheriff or constable may be liable for wrongfully breaking into a dwelling house to serve or execute civil process.

A sheriff or constable is liable for breaking into a dwelling house through an outer door to serve or execute civil process,[63] and this is also true where he forcibly enters an open window;[64] but he is not liable if he enters through an open outer door,[65] or otherwise gains a peaceable entrance,[66] and then forcibly enters an inner room in order to seize the goods subject to the writ. So it has been held that a sheriff or constable is not liable where he uses reasonable care in removing furniture from a dwelling pursuant to an execution requiring him to dispossess a tenant, although he forces open a locked door on the tenant's refusal to grant him admission.[67] Where an attachment is made by breaking into a house, the value of the goods attached cannot be deducted from the damages for which the sheriff is liable for his wrongful act.[68]

Entry and search of premises of stranger. Where a sheriff, having an execution, enters the outer door of a stranger to the writ, goes into his buildings, and breaks open his outhouses in search of property of defendant, but finds none, he is liable in trespass.[69] However, where an officer having a writ of replevin enters a house peaceably and on the invitation of the owner and makes a search for the goods he incurs no liability thereby[70] unless he does unnecessary injury in making the search.[71]

d. Failure to Note Time of Receipt of Writ

Failure of a sheriff to comply with a statute requiring him to make a minute on an execution as to the time of its receipt may render him liable for resulting damage.

Where a statute makes it the duty of the sheriff, on receiving an execution, to make a minute thereon of the time of its receipt, as considered supra § 44, he is liable for an omission to do so if any loss or damage results from such neglect.[72] The fact that the execution plaintiff, after delivery of the writ to the sheriff, ordered him to return it before the return-day, does not relieve the sheriff from liability for failure to indorse on the writ the date of delivery,[73] and where a sheriff accepts a writ of execution from another than plaintiff, without requiring evidence of his authority to deliver it, he cannot excuse his neglect to indorse the date of delivery by urging a want of authority in such person to deliver the writ.[74]

e. Failure to Make Inventory of Property Levied on

Failure of a sheriff or constable to make an inventory of the property levied on may render him liable for resulting damage.

Where it is the duty of a sheriff or constable to make an inventory of the property levied on, his failure to do so will render him liable for any damages resulting therefrom.[75]

C. WRONGFUL LEVY ON, OR TAKING OF, PROPERTY

§ 63. In General

Where the act of a sheriff or constable in seizing or levying on property is wrongful, he is liable to the owner of the property for the resulting damage.

Where the act of a sheriff or constable in seizing or levying on property is wrongful, he is liable to the owner of the property for the resulting damage,[76] unless he has protected himself by an indemnity bond.[77] It has been held that a sheriff who seizes property in claim and delivery proceedings is merely the agent of plaintiff, and he incurs no liability by the seizure unless plaintiff is liable therefor.[78]

What constitutes seizure. In order to constitute a seizure of real property for which, if wrongful, the sheriff will be liable, it is not necessary that there should be an ouster of the owner, but it is sufficient that the sheriff has, through himself or another, asserted an unlawful dominion over the property,[79] as by putting a receiver in possession.[80] In order to constitute a seizure of personalty, the sheriff or constable must exercise some dominion or control over it,[81] which amounts to an interference with the owner's right to possession and control,[82] but it is not necessary that he should take the property into his actual possession,[83] or remove[84] or sell[85] it, and, if he seizes property of a third person, it is immaterial that he assumes to levy only on the interest of the execution debtor therein.[86] When property is already in the possession of an officer under a lawful seizure, he incurs no liability by a formal levy on the same property under another writ, even though the latter levy is wrongful, where the property is not detained from the owner by reason of the second levy.[87]

§ 64. Acts or Omissions Constituting Wrongful Levy or Seizure

Generally stated, possession by a sheriff or constable under a warrant, whether actual or constructive, is not wrongful unless the officer is not justified in executing the warrant because it is not regular on its face or not issued by competent authority, unless the property held is not that described by the writ, or unless the writ, if originally effective, is no longer so.

Generally stated, possession by a sheriff or constable under a warrant, whether actual or constructive, is not wrongful unless the officer is not justified in executing the warrant because it is not regular on its face or not issued by competent authority, unless the property held is not that described by the writ, or unless the writ, if originally effective, is no longer so.[88] A sheriff or constable who levies on property under a void writ is liable in damages for the trespass,[89] and it is no defense that he afterward seized and sold the property under a valid writ in favor of a person other than plaintiff in the void writ,[90] but a sheriff or constable levying a writ of attachment[91] or sequestration[92] according to its mandate is not liable for the wrongful suing out of the writ in the absence of any showing that he conspired with or instigated plaintiff in its procurement. Although it is better practice for a sheriff or constable who has a writ of replevin to show it at the time he replevies property in the possession of a person other than defendant, the failure of the officer to show the writ is not fatal, where there is no request on the officer to produce it, and does not render the taking wrongful,[93] and the failure of the officer to submit to defendant in the replevin suit, for his inspection and approval, the replevin bond before he replevies the property does not render the taking of the property under the writ wrongful.[94]

Seizure without process or warrant. A sheriff or constable who, without any process, seizes property against the protest of the owner is liable therefor, although he believed that his act was authorized,[95] and even though the statute authorizes a seizure of property without a warrant under certain circumstances, an officer acting under such statute is held to a strict compliance with all its requirements, failing in which he is liable for the seizure.[96] However, it has been held that a seizure without a warrant will not render the officer liable for the detention of the property under a warrant subsequently issued.[97]

§ 65. —— Matters Relating to Property Seized in General

A sheriff or constable is liable for the seizure of property outside the territory over which his authority extends, or for the seizure of property other than that designated in the process or order of court.

A sheriff or constable who seizes property outside of the territory over which his authority ex-

Seizure of land on crop

Sheriff was held not liable for wrongful seizure of crops belonging to third possessor gathered after seizure of land in foreclosure proceedings but before acquisition by mortgagee with sheriff's consent, since seizure of crop does not automatically result from seizure of land, notwithstanding statute providing that fruits gathered under seizure of immovable shall be considered part thereof, which statute is affected by exceptions protecting preexisting rights to crops—Vosburg v. tends is to be regarded as though he were a stranger having no writ, and is liable in trespass to the owner.[98] Where a process or order of court requires the sheriff to seize or take possession of certain designated property, he is liable if, under color of such process or order, he seizes other property,[99] and no demand is necessary before bringing an action against him for such unlawful seizure.[1]

§ 66. —— Property Not Subject to Levy

a. In general
b. Exempt property
c. Property in custodia legis

a. In General

A sheriff or constable is liable for damages caused by his act in seizing property not subject to levy under the writ.

A sheriff or constable is liable for damages caused by his act in seizing property not subject to levy under the writ which he was assuming to execute.[2]

b. Exempt Property

(1) In general
(2) Necessity of claim and selection by debtor
(3) Failure to allow or set off exemption

(1) In General

A sheriff or constable may be held liable for the damage which has resulted from his making a levy on exempt property.

A sheriff or constable may be held liable for the damage which has resulted from his making a levy on exempt property,[3] and refusing to restore the same on proper and timely demand,[4] where he knew,[5] or was bound under the law to know,[6] or had reasonable ground for believing,[7] that the property was specifically exempt, or the exemption was claimed by the debtor,[8] or some other person entitled to take advantage of his statutory exemption,[9] although the sheriff may disregard a claim of exemption as to all of the debtor's property to an amount greater than the law allows.[10] A mere seizure of property does not render the sheriff liable, where he did not know that the property was exempt.[11]

Waiver of exemption. The officer does not incur any liability by making a levy on exempt property, where the debtor has waived his exemption,[12] although a waiver will not relieve the officer if he seizes property to which the waiver does not apply.[13]

Second levy after release of property as exempt. Where a sheriff or constable has levied on goods and afterward released them as exempt from seizure, an attempt by such officer to make a second seizure of such goods is without authority of law and a trespass.[14]

Intermingling of exempt and nonexempt property. Where the exempt property is confused with property not exempt, the sheriff is not liable for levying on the whole, unless the debtor sets apart, or claims to set apart, the exempt property,[15] but an intermingling in the owner's house of articles of household furniture, which are exempt from attachment, with other articles not so exempt, has been held not such a confusion of goods as will justify the officer, on failure of the owner to claim any of the articles as exempt, in attaching all of them.[16]

Claim of articles other than those set off. Where a debtor has more property of a particular kind than is exempt from execution, and a writ is levied on a portion of such property, leaving as much as the law exempts, and thereafter the debtor claims as exempt a portion of the property levied on, and the residue in the hands of the officer would not be sufficient to satisfy the writ, the debtor must, in order to make good his claim of exemption, surrender to the officer the other property of the same general kind subject to execution, or as much as may be necessary to satisfy the writ, and, if he fails to do so, he is not entitled to recover against the officer for an unlawful seizure.[17]

(2) Necessity of Claim and Selection by Debtor

A demand or claim of exemption may be necessary to support an action against the sheriff or constable, where he did not know, and was not chargeable with knowledge, that the property levied on was exempt.

A demand or claim of exemption may be necessary to support an action against the sheriff or constable where he did not know, and was not chargeable with knowledge, that the property levied on was exempt,[18] as where the debtor has property of a certain kind in excess of his exemption,[19] but no demand is necessary where the officer knows of the exemption or wrongfully levies on articles which are specifically exempted by statute.[20] A mere seizure of property does not render the sheriff liable where the property is not specifically exempt by statute and the debtor declines to designate the articles which he desires to claim,[21] especially where the levy is released before a schedule of the property is delivered to the officer as provided by statute.[22] Under a statute relieving an officer from liability where the debtor fails to make affidavit that the property about to be levied on is exempt, a purchaser of property which, in the hands of the vendor, is exempt may, without making such affidavit, maintain an action against a sheriff who levies on it under an execution against the vendor.[23]

Time of claim. In order to render the sheriff or constable liable, the claim must ordinarily be made before or at the time of the levy,[24] or within a reasonable time thereafter,[25] or at least before sale,[26] but, where the statute requires the officer to appraise the goods and set aside as much as is exempt, the debtor need not make his claim at the time of the levy.[27]

(3) Failure to Allow or Set Off Exemption

Under some statutes if, after the levy, the sheriff or constable fails to apprise the debtor of his exemption rights or refuses to cause an appraisement to be made, or to allow the debtor to select the property which he will hold as exempt, or to set off the debtor's exemptions for him, he is liable to the debtor for failing to perform his duties in these respects.

Under some statutes, the sheriff may in the first instance levy on any of the debtor's property which he can find, and hold it until an inventory and appraisement can be made, and he cannot be held liable for wrongful seizure of exempt property before an appraisement is made[28] and the debtor has demanded and selected his exemption;[29] but if, after such levy, the sheriff or constable fails to apprise the debtor of his exemption rights,[30] or refuses to cause an appraisement to be made,[31]

Release of property held by third person

In absence of agreement with judgment creditor, officer to whom execution is delivered cannot release debtor's property in hands of third person, unless formal provisions of statute relating to exemption have been complied with by delivery of a schedule.—Hatfield ex rel. or to allow such debtor to select the property which he will hold as exempt, and have it set apart to him,[32] or, in a proper case, to set off the debtor's exemptions for him,[33] he is liable to the debtor for failing to perform his duties in these respects, without any further demand.[34]

Where the statute requires an officer levying an execution to see that an appraisement of the debtor's property is made for the purpose of determining how much thereof he is entitled to hold exempt from execution, the sheriff or constable cannot, in an action against him by the debtor for taking exempt property, claim in defense that the property was not shown to be exempt because no appraisement was made,[35] but it has been held that, where a debtor learns of his rights in time to make application for his exemption, and does make such application, he can recover nothing on a petition which alleges that the sheriff failed to apprise him of his exemption rights.[36] So, where the debtor claims that all his property is exempt before a levy, but the officer afterward levies on a part of it, there is no necessity for the officer then to go through the idle ceremony of informing the debtor of his exemption rights, and he is not liable for failing to do so.[37]

Where an execution is never issued in an attachment suit, the officer's failure to give the debtor the benefit of the exemption law does not result in damage to the debtor, and no action will lie against the officer for the trespass.[38]

c. Property in Custodia Legis

A sheriff or constable may be held liable for any damages resulting from a seizure or attempt to seize property in custodia legis.

As property in custodia legis is not subject to seizure under other process, a sheriff or constable may be held liable for any damage resulting from a seizure or attempt to seize it.[39] Where plaintiff, a constable, attached certain goods, and defendant, another constable, subsequently attached the same goods while they were in plaintiff's custody, the fact that the person under whose process plaintiff acted had agreed to save him harmless for not removing the property was held not to affect his right of action against defendant for the trespass.[40]

§ 67. —— Property Subject to Lien or Encumbrance

a. In general
b. Landlord's lien

a. In General

A sheriff may incur liability by seizing personal property which is subject to a lien or encumbrance, but he incurs no liability to the mortgagee of personal property which is in the possession of the mortgagor by seizing the property under process against the mortgagor, where he does nothing to place the property beyond the reach of the mortgagee or to prevent him from taking possession of it when his right of possession accrues.

Under the common-law rule that the equity of a mortgagor of chattels was not subject to attachment or execution a sheriff has been held liable as a trespasser where he seized mortgaged chattels under process running against the mortgagor,[41] with notice of the mortgagee's claim,[42] but under the modern rule that the mortgagor's interest is subject to levy, as considered in Attachment § 73 b and Executions § 45, it is held that, where personal property subject to a chattel mortgage remains in the possession of the mortgagor, the sheriff incurs no liability to the mortgagee by seizing it under process against the mortgagor,[43] where he does nothing to place the property beyond the reach of the mortgagee[44] or to prevent him from taking possession of it when his right of possession accrues;[45] and the same rule applies to a levy on property in possession of a conditional sale purchaser.[46] However, where the mortgagee of chattels is in possession, an officer renders himself liable to the mortgagee by levying on the chat-

tels under process against the mortgagor,[47] and the same is true where the mortgagee is entitled to possession under the mortgage[48] and the property is detained by the officer after demand for possession by the mortgagee.[49] So, where a sheriff or constable, with notice of the mortgagee's claim, attaches the entire mortgaged property, and not the interest of the mortgagor alone, takes it from the mortgagee's possession, and detains it until it is sold under the process, he is liable to such mortgagee for the mortgage debt.[50]

A statute providing that personal property may be attached when in possession of the mortgagor, and the mortgagee be summoned as trustee, does not exonerate the officer from liability to the mortgagee for conversion, where the property is not in fact in the mortgagor's possession,[51] but is in the possession of the mortgagee,[52] or of the attaching officer's keeper under a prior levy,[53] and in the latter case, the mortgagor may bring an action against the officer,[54] unless he has waived the conversion[55]

A sheriff who seizes goods while they are in transit under an attachment against the purchaser is liable to the seller for refusing to recognize the seller's lien or right of stoppage in transitu.[56] So, a sheriff has been held liable for seizing under process goods shipped for transportation and thus subject to the lien of the master or shipowner for freight, expenses, charges, etc., without furnishing indemnity.[57] It has also been held that, where a sheriff seizes under attachment goods in the possession of a consignee, who has made advances thereon, he is liable to the consignee as a trespasser,[58] although there is authority to the contrary.[59]

Necessity of demand. Where, under the statute, the mortgage vests the legal title and right of possession in the mortgagee, no demand by him is necessary in order to hold the officer liable for wrongfully seizing the goods on an attachment against the mortgagor,[60] but, if the mortgage gives the mortgagee the right to take possession on default in payment of the debt, or if he deems himself unsafe, a sheriff is not liable for levying on, and removing to a safe place, goods in possession of the mortgagor before default, and before any claim to possession is made by the mortgagee under the insecurity clause, until the mortgagee has demanded the goods[61] So, where a mortgage entitles the mortgagee to immediate possession on attachment against the mortgagor, a voluntary release of an attachment against the mortgagor, followed by delivery of the property to the mortgagor or to the person in whose possession it was when attached, discharges the officer from liability to the mortgagee, in the absence of any demand, either on the creditor or officer, as required by statute.[62]

Tender or deposit of amount due mortgagee. Where the statute requires the officer on seizing mortgaged chattels to tender to, or deposit for, the mortgagee the amount due him, a sheriff or constable is liable for seizing the property under process without making such tender or deposit.[63] Under a statute permitting an attaching creditor of a conditional vendee to attach the property on payment of the unpaid purchase price to the vendor, after default in payment or tender the officer who holds the property or attachment is a trespasser and is liable for his unlawful taking,[64] and cannot discharge himself by showing a loss of the property without his fault.[65]

Statement of claim and demand for payment. Where the statute provides that a mortgagee of property attached, demanding payment of the money due, shall present to the officer or attaching creditor a just and true account of his claim, no action can be maintained against the attaching officer without presenting such account[66] and demanding payment.[67] The mortgagee cannot maintain a suit for conversion against the attaching officer where he has demanded more than the amount due him,[68] but it has been held that a demand is not invalidated by including therein the costs of protest of the notes secured by the mortgage, where the amount due exceeds the value of the property.[69] If proper demand for payment is made, failure of the officer to comply therewith renders him liable to the mortgagee as a trespasser ab initio.[70] Notwithstanding the mortgagee's failure to present the account of his claim and demand judgment, he may recover for conversion of the property, where the officer attached it in the hands of a third person to whom the mortgagor had let it, with the mortgagee's consent, and placed it in charge of a keeper, where, after the seizure, the officer released the attachment, but left the property in possession of the keeper, and refused the mortgagee's request to restore it to the person from whose possession he had taken it.[71] Statutes requiring a claim and demand for payment have been held to have no application to a seizure of mortgaged property in an action against a person who has no interest in the property,[72] and in such a case the mortgagee may maintain the action without demanding payment.[73]

Invalidity of mortgage. The officer may show in defense that the mortgage is invalid,[74] or that the mortgage debt had no real existence, in which case the mortgagee's damages will be only in respect of the possession;[75] but failure to record the mortgage does not render it invalid as against the attaching officer, so as to relieve him from liability, under a statute making an unrecorded mortgage void as to creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers in good faith,[76] especially where such provision is qualified by another provision to the effect that mortgages not made in conformity with the requirements of the statute shall be valid between the parties and as to persons having actual notice thereof.[77]

In some jurisdictions a sheriff or constable, levying on a tenant's goods, who removes the goods from the premises, or permits them to be removed, without payment of the rent due to the landlord, may be liable to the landlord.

In jurisdictions in which the law forbids the taking of a tenant's goods on execution, unless, before their removal from the demised premises, the execution plaintiff pays to the landlord the rent due, as considered in Executions § 128 b, where a sheriff or constable, levying on a tenant's goods, removes them from the premises,[78] or permits them to be removed,[79] without such payment, he is liable to the landlord, although, in order to enforce such liability, it must be shown that the officer had notice that rent was due[80] before he removed the goods.[81] However, a sheriff is not liable to a landlord for removing the goods of an undertenant, leaving the rent unpaid, although notice that the rent is due is duly served;[82] and he is not liable for rent becoming due after the levy.[83] A sale of the property has been held to be a removal thereof as far as affects the officer's liability.[84]

§ 68. —— Property Belonging to Third Person

a. In general
b. Possession of property at time of seizure; notice and demand
c. Confusion of goods

sued by a court or judge having jurisdiction commands the sheriff to seize certain property specified therein, the sheriff incurs no liability by obeying such mandate, although the property belongs to a person other than the party against whom the writ issued.

It is the general rule that a sheriff or constable who levies on property belonging to a person other than defendant in a writ which specifies no particular property is liable to the owner of the property for the resulting damages[85] if the owner presents his claim in the manner and form prescribed by statute;[86] and the officer's liability for such a wrongful seizure is not dependent on his taking the property into his actual possession,[87] or selling it.[88] The officer is liable for taking property in which the execution debtor has no interest, although he assumes to levy only on the interest of the execution debtor therein,[89] but, where property levied on belongs to the execution debtor, the sheriff, levying execution thereon, is not liable to a third person claiming the same, although there is an agreement, unknown to the sheriff, between such person and the execution creditor whereby the creditor is estopped to question such person's ownership of the property.[90]

Although two persons or corporations have the same name, the sheriff is liable for executing against one of them a writ directed against the other.[91] Where a sheriff takes the goods of one person under an attachment against another, recovery may be had against him for the trespass after he has gone out of office, although his successor sold the goods and received the proceeds thereof.[92]

Property specified in writ. Where a writ issued by a court or judge having jurisdiction commands the sheriff to seize certain property specified therein, the general rule is that the sheriff incurs no liability by obeying such mandate, although the property belongs to a person other than the person against whom the writ issued,[93] although some authorities have apparently refused to recognize the rule,[94] and others, while recognizing the rule,[95] have held it to be inapplicable where the officer finds the property in the adverse possession of a third person who is not in privity with defendant on the writ,[96] but the sheriff, although incurring no liability for seizing the goods, is liable for refusing to restore them to the owner after demand.[97] The general rule does not apply, however, where a writ, such as a writ of replevin, commands the officer to take certain specified property from the possession of defendant named therein, and in such case the officer is liable if he executes the writ by taking the property from a stranger to the writ, who is the bona fide owner and in the actual possession.[98]

notice thereof, purchases the property from defendant does so at his peril, and must abide the result of the action, and the sheriff incurs no liability by taking the property from his possession [99]

Property fraudulently conveyed. In an action against a sheriff for seizing property of one person under process against another he may show that the property was conveyed to the claimant by the debtor in fraud of creditors,[1] provided he makes the necessary showing that he represents a creditor of the seller entitled to attack the validity of the transfer,[2] and this is true notwithstanding a subsequent affirmance of the sale by the creditor, without the officer's consent,[3] but, if he fails to make such showing,[4] or, for any reason, is not in a position to attack the transfer,[5] he is liable. So, it has been held that a sheriff who, under a warrant from the insolvent court commanding him to take the property of the insolvent, seizes property conveyed by the insolvent prior to his insolvency, cannot justify the seizure on the ground that the conveyance was in fraud of creditors.[6]

Seizure of common property under process against cotenant. In the absence of statute an officer under process against one of several cotenants may, without liability, seize and take into his exclusive possession the common property under a levy on defendant's interest therein,[7] but, if he assumes to levy on the whole property, his act is wrongful as against the cotenant not named in the process, and he is liable therefor.[8]

Seizure of partnership property under process against one partner. An officer who levies on and sells partnership property as the property of one of the partners is guilty of a trespass.[9] On the other hand, it has been held that a partner cannot recover against a sheriff for levying on the firm property on an execution against his copartner.[10] So, it has been held that an officer is not liable merely because he takes into his possession partnership property on a writ directed against one of the partners only.[11]

Seizure of wife's property under process against husband. A sheriff or constable is liable for the resulting damage where he levies on the separate property of a married woman under process against her husband,[12] and a like rule obtains where the officer levies an attachment on property owned by the debtor's Indian wife, residing on a reservation.[13]

b. Possession of Property at Time of Seizure; Notice and Demand

(1) In general
(2) Form, requisites, and service of notice or demand

(1) In General

The general rule is that, where property is in the possession of the defendant in a writ as apparent owner, and the sheriff or constable at the time of the levy has no actual knowledge or reason to suppose that another person is the true owner, an action cannot be maintained against the officer for seizing such property until he has received notice of the true ownership and has refused to restore the property to the true owner on demand; but, where the property is in the possession of a person other than the defendant in the writ, and if defendant is not the true owner, no demand or notice is essential to support an action against the sheriff or constable for seizing the property.

Although there is authority to the contrary,[14] the general rule is that, where property is in the possession of defendant in a writ as apparent owner, and the sheriff or constable at the time of the levy has no actual knowledge or reason to suppose that another person is the true owner, an action cannot be maintained against the officer for seizing such property until he has received notice of the true ownership,[15] and has refused to restore the property to the true owner on demand,[16] but, where the officer levies on goods in the possession of defendant in the writ, with notice that they belong to a third person, he is liable to the owner for the trespass,[17] and a formal demand for possession is not necessary before instituting suit where the officer has knowledge or notice that the person in possession is not the owner.[18] In an administrator's action to set aside judgments against deceased and to enjoin a sheriff's sale of property, it was held not error to award possession of the property to interveners claiming under assignment from deceased, although no demand had been made on the sheriff for possession before action was instituted,[19] as the sheriff, in such a case, does not have such possession at the time the cross complaint was filed as would make a demand necessary,[20] because, as the property was in the actual custody of the law at the time of the filing of the cross complaint in the equitable proceeding wherein the title to the property was in issue, a demand is unnecessary where the sheriff could not comply therewith.[21]

Under statutory provisions requiring a third party claimant of property seized under process against another to give notice of his claim to, or make a demand for, the property, such notice or demand is necessary to render the officer liable,[22] and the third party's failure to assert his claim after knowledge of the seizure will bar his right of action for trespass or conversion.[23] In accordance with the provisions of the statutes, such a notice or demand is required only where the property is levied on while in the possession of the person named in the process,[24] under such circumstances as to raise a presumption that he is the owner thereof.[25] Some statutes have been held to apply only when the property was taken from the possession of defendant by the officer in the proper discharge of his duty,[26] and, hence, where the taking was not authorized by the process under which the officer acted, a compliance with the statute is not necessary to render the officer liable.[27]

Property in possession of third person. Where the property is in the possession of a person other than defendant in the writ, the general rule is that the sheriff or constable acts at his peril in seizing it,[28] and, if defendant is not the true owner, the seizure is wrongful in the first instance, and no demand or notice is essential to fix the liability of the officer or support an action against him,[29] unless the statute so requires;[30] but an officer is not liable as a trespasser for making the levy if the property really belongs to defendant.[31] Statutory provisions requiring notice or demand by the owner where the person named in the writ is in possession of the property have no application where the property is in the possession of a person other than the person named in the writ.[32]

(2) Form, Requisites, and Service of Notice or Demand

The form and contents of the notice or demand must comply with statutory requirements.

Where notice or demand is required to render the officer liable, the form and contents of such notice or demand must comply with the statute in order to charge the officer.[33] Thus, if the statute requires written notice, the officer is not liable unless the statute is complied with,[34] and it has been held that the officer must in some manner receive the original notice,[35] and that it is not sufficient to read the notice to him[36] and deliver to him a copy thereof.[37] It is sometimes required that the notice shall state the nature and extent of claimant's interest in the property,[38] and a notice which fails to state the source of claimant's interest or the consideration paid as required by statute is insufficient to charge the officer.[39] A demand on a special bailiff in custody of the property has been held sufficient,[40] although it has been held that a conversation between claimant and the bailee of the officer is not notice to the latter.[41]

If the mode of service is not prescribed, it will be sufficient if it appears that the officer in fact received the notice,[42] the manner of receiving the notice is immaterial, and it is enough that the officer actually receives it.[43] The service on the levying officer of the affidavit and notice of claim prescribed by statute is a sufficient demand.[44] So, it has been held that where, at the time of the levy, a third person was owner of and entitled to immediate possession of the property, and so notified the officer in writing, identifying it and forbidding the sale, such notice was equivalent to a demand for return of the property.[45]

Necessity of second notice. Where the owner of property taken on execution against a third person asserts his claim before the sheriff, who notifies the execution plaintiff of such claim, and the latter gives an indemnity bond in which he admits knowledge of the claim, the owner is not required, as against the sheriff or executive plaintiff, to assert his claim again by forbidding the sale.[46]

Waiver of notice or defects therein. Although the notice required by statute is not obviated by the fact that officer has been indemnified,[47] where the notice is merely to enable the officer to secure a proper indemnifying bond, defects in form or substance are waived where that purpose is accomplished.[48] The execution of an indemnity bond to the levying officer after notice of a claim to the seized property has been given, for the purpose of having him retain the property, and the acceptance by the officer of such bond amounts to a waiver of defects in the notice.[49]

c. Confusion of Goods

Where goods of a third person are mixed with goods of the debtor so that they cannot be distinguished, the levying sheriff or constable will not be liable to the third person until he has received notice and demand from him and has refused such demand where the confusion of goods is due to the act of the third person.

Where goods of a third person are mixed with goods of the debtor so that they cannot be distinguished, the levying sheriff or constable may seize the whole,[50] and will not be liable to the third person until he has received notice and demand from him and has refused such demand,[51] where the confusion of goods is due to the act of the third person,[52] and he makes no attempt to point out, or have set aside his own goods on being afforded an opportunity to do so;[53] but the officer has been held liable where the intermingling was not due to any act of the third person done with fraudulent intent, and he did nothing to induce the officer to levy on the goods,[54] and a demand is not necessary where the goods of the third person could readily be separated from those of the debtor.[55] Where merchandise belonging to a debtor has been fraudulently mixed with that of a third person and the latter points out such goods as he prefers should be taken by an officer making an attachment against the debtor, the officer is not liable for taking the goods pointed out, although they did not belong to the debtor.[56]

Where goods of a third person in the possession of the debtor as apparent owner are so intermingled with goods belonging to the latter that they cannot be distinguished, the officer is not liable for levying on the whole until the third person has given notice and demanded their return,[57] identifying and pointing out to the officer the articles belonging to him,[58] and it is immaterial that they were intermingled without his consent;[59] but it has been held that, if the third person offers to designate his goods, and the officer refuses to allow him to do so or to heed his designation, no demand is necessary before suit,[60] and, where a debtor, with the intent to prevent a seizure of his goods on execution, has intermixed them with the goods of another in the possession of such other, and without such other's knowledge, the officer must at his peril avoid seizing the goods of the innocent third person.[61] The owner of goods levied on is not estopped to sue for their conversion, although they were mixed with others levied on, and he did not till the next day claim that they belonged to him where none of the goods belonged to the execution defendant, and he told the officer that this was the case before the levy.[62]

Effect of notice or demand. Where the owner, before suit, gives the officer notice of his ownership, designating the particular articles belonging to him, and demands their return, the officer is liable for a failure or refusal to do so.[63]

§ 69. —— Matters Relating to Mode, Time, and Sufficiency of Levy in General

A sheriff may be liable for damages where he fails to comply with the statute prescribing the mode and the time of the levy.

Where the debtor has the right to point out the property to be levied on, the sheriff is liable if he fails to respect such designation[64] or to allow the debtor an opportunity to designate.[65] Where the statute provides that in levying execution "personal property shall be last taken," a sheriff who levies on the personal property of an execution defendant who designates sufficient real property for the levy is liable for all damages resulting therefrom;[66] but, where the statute requires personalty to be first levied on, a sheriff does not become liable to a recovery for a misfeasance in office by levying on lands where defendant in the execution had personal property to satisfy the debt, unless it appears that such property was known and accessible to the sheriff,[67] and that he knew it to belong to defendant,[68] or it was pointed out to him as such and an indemnity offered to sell it.[69]

Property of principal and surety. As a general rule an officer charged with the execution of a writ is not required to investigate and determine the respective equities of the different defendants as against each other, and may, without incurring any liability, levy on the property of either, without inquiring whether he was principal or surety in the liability which was merged in the judgment,[70] but, where a judgment is rendered and execution issued against a principal and a surety, and the surety has caused the question of suretyship to be tried and determined, and has procured an order to be made as provided by statute, that the principal's property shall be first exhausted, the sheriff may be held liable for levying on the property of the surety before exhausting that of the principal.[71]

Time of levy. It has been held that an officer is not to be regarded as a trespasser because he levies under an attachment less than the time required before the return day,[72] although he might be so regarded if he levied on a day, such as Sunday, on which service is made null and void by statute;[73] but it has also been held that a sheriff is liable as a trespasser where he levies under an attachment more than the time prescribed by statute before the return day,[74] or before the expiration of the time allowed by statute to the debtor within which to file a schedule of his property.[75]

An officer who makes a levy under a writ after he has returned it[76] or after the return day[77] is a mere trespasser, and an officer who levies an execution after the writ has expired is liable in damages therefor.[78] Where a sheriff levies on and sells property under an execution coming to his hands after the expiration of his term, he is liable as a trespasser,[79] and the same is true where, at the time of the levy, the writ, as well as his term of office, had expired.[80]

§ 70. —— Excessive Levy

The sheriff is liable to defendant against whom process is issued for an unreasonable and unnecessary levy on more of his goods than is necessary to satisfy the debt and costs.

The sheriff is liable to defendant against whom process is issued for an unreasonable and unnecessary levy on more of his goods than is necessary to satisfy the debt and costs,[81] although the officer, in making such levy, does not become a trespasser ab initio.[82] A constable who, under a distress warrant, makes a distress for more rent than is due is liable therefor,[83] but the mere fact that a levy may be excessive does not subject the officer to any liability where he acts in good faith and in the exercise of a sound discretion.[84] The officer cannot be held as a trespasser where he attaches a single indivisible article of personal property, although of much greater value than the amount he is directed to attach, where no other or sufficient property to satisfy his precept can be found.[85]

Where a sheriff, on levying an attachment on part of a stock of goods, takes and holds possession of the whole stock, and refuses to yield possession to the owner, he is liable as for the conversion of the entire stock,[86] and the fact that other levies were subsequently made by the sheriff on the other portions of the same stock has been held not to affect his liability for the wrongful possession first taken, which was never surrendered.[87] An officer who has levied a wrongful attachment on a stock of merchandise, and excluded the owner from the store, is responsible for whatever articles he allows others to take therefrom, although he has not levied on them, and they are taken under process against another person.[88] Likewise, where an officer who attaches cattle on mesne process takes defendant's hay to feed them without his consent, he will be held liable in trover for the hay.[89]

Waiver. The debtor may waive an excessive levy as far as any liability on the part of the officer is concerned.[90]

§ 71. —— Irregularities Subsequent to Seizure

A sheriff or constable cannot be made a trespasser for attaching property under mesne process, by reason of any irregularity in the proceedings of another officer in selling the property under execution.

A sheriff or constable cannot be made a trespasser for attaching property under mesne process, by reason of any irregularity in the proceedings of another officer in selling the property under execution.[91] So, a sheriff was held not liable to a buyer for conversion of the goods attached when owned by the attachment debtor, merely because after the attachment the property was sold, and, on dismissal of the original action, and the beginning of a second, the sheriff continued in possession under a second attachment.[92]

§ 72. Particular Matters Affecting Liability

Particular matters which have been held to affect or not to affect the liability of a sheriff or constable for a wrongful levy on, or taking of, property include subsequent orders or executions, intent of the officer, matters relating to title, assent to the officer's acts or estoppel to show title, taking or failing to take indemnity, trial of right of property, application of the proceeds of the property, return of, or offer to return, the property, and sale of the property by the owner.

The circumstances of a case may be such as to relieve a sheriff or constable from liability for a wrongful levy.[93] The filing of an attachment bond required by a statute, authorizing the issuance of an attachment against any defendant on the filing of a bond, and providing that, when the property is in possession of a person other than defendant, such person shall be summoned as a garnishee, will not excuse the sheriff from liability for seizing the garnishee's goods, as the bond inures as security only to defendant in the attachment, and not to the garnishee.[94] So, an officer who has attached the property of one person on a writ against another person cannot set up, in bar of an action of trover against him by the owner, that the property when attached was in the possession of a carrier who had a lien on it for freight.[95] Where a sheriff seizes the property of a third person under an attachment, a subsequent order of court directing sale of the property as perishable,[96] or a subsequent judgment and special execution[97] will not protect him from liability.

Intent of officer. While it has been said that the conduct and motives of an officer at the time of making an attachment are to be looked at in determining whether he acted unlawfully,[98] the intent of the officer cannot be inquired into when he acts in accordance with the law;[99] and it is well settled that the good faith of an officer or the innocence of his intent do not relieve him of liability for levying on exempt property[1] or on property which does not belong to defendant in the process under which he acts.[2]

Matters relating to title in general. An officer against whom replevin is brought for property attached by him under process against a person other than plaintiff in replevin may avail himself of any title of the person for whom he made the attachment,[3] but an officer sued as a trespasser for an unlawful taking of property in the hands of a person other than defendant in the process under which he acted cannot set up a paramount title in a stranger as a defense.[4] The title of plaintiff to the property seized may be attacked by an officer justifying under the writ.[5] So, in an action in a state court against a sheriff for taking and carrying away plaintiff's goods to satisfy an attachment against a third person, defendant has the right to show that the title claimed by plaintiff to the goods is void, because deduced from a sale in violation of a state law,[6] but he cannot set up that such sale was void under the national bankruptcy law.[7] Where property in the possession of a person claiming title to it from a corporation of which a receiver had been appointed was levied on as property of the corporation, under an execution on a judgment rendered subsequent to the appointment of the receiver, it was held that the obligors on an indemnity bond given to the sheriff on such seizure could not, in order to escape liability, set up that the corporation's title had never passed to the person in possession of the property.[8]

Assent to officer's acts, and estoppel to show title. An officer incurs no liability for levying on exempt property where the debtor assents to the levy,[9] but, where a mortgagee of chattels assents to a levy thereon under process against the mortgagor, on condition that such levy be made in recognition of the mortgage, such assent will not protect the officer in making an unqualified levy.[10] So, where an officer takes goods from the possession of one person under an execution against a third person, he cannot justify by an authority from the real owner of the property.[11] On the other hand, it has been held that a plaintiff in replevin who accepts delivery of the goods and ratifies the seizure makes the sheriff his agent, and the latter may justify the taking as by direction of the true owner.[12]

In an action against a sheriff for seizing goods alleged to belong to a third party, general rules as to estoppel are applicable.[13] Thus, a representation which does not mislead the sheriff cannot furnish the foundation for an estoppel of the owner of property,[14] and a claim or notice cannot constitute an estoppel in the absence of a reliance thereon by the officer.[15] Where a sheriff levied on property as that of the husband, and, although both the husband and wife were present at the time of the levy, inventory, and appraisement, neither of them claimed that the wife had any interest therein or that they were holding the property as tenants in entirety, but they permitted the sheriff to treat the property as that of the husband, they were estopped thereafter to assert that the title to the property was other than in the husband.[16]

Where the statute with respect to trustee process requires all questions affecting the interests of a mortgagee in the chattels to be finally determined in the action in which they were attached, a mortgagee who is summoned as trustee but defaults is estopped to maintain an action against the officer for conversion of the chattels.[17] Where a person acquired title to property stored in a warehouse by a transfer of the warehouse receipt and the issuance of a new one in his name, the delivery of the goods by the warehouseman to the sheriff on replevin process against another person will not operate as a voluntary surrender by the owner so as to defeat a recovery against the sheriff for conversion.[18]

Taking, or failure to take, indemnity. The liability of a sheriff for wrongfully levying on property not belonging to defendant is not affected by the fact that he took a bond of indemnity,[19] unless the statute makes the indemnity a substitute for the liability of the sheriff, as considered infra § 133. The failure to act under a statute providing for indemnity does not affect his liability,[20] and the officer's failure to take the indemnity provided for by statute, being his own neglect, cannot relieve him from liability for damages resulting from a wrongful seizure.[21]

Trial of right of property or recovery of judgment for property According to some authorities, where the right to property is tried by a sheriff's jury or adjudicated by a court, a finding that the property belongs to defendant in the process and is subject to levy relieves the sheriff from all liability for levying thereon,[22] but other authorities hold that such a finding does not relieve the sheriff from all liability,[23] although it may be shown in mitigation of damages, as discussed infra § 75. A trial of the right of property levied on will not protect the sheriff where the debtor claims it as exempt,[24] and, where the trial results in an order of restitution and a return of the property pursuant to the order, it is no bar to an action by claimant against the officer to recover damages for the seizure and detention of the property,[25] unless the statute so provides.[26]

One whose property has been wrongfully seized by an officer under process against another person does not lose his right to recover damages for the trespass by recovering judgment for the property in replevin against the officer,[27] or the purchaser at the execution sale,[28] even though there is a tender of the goods to the owner after judgment in replevin;[29] and such owner does not lose his right to damages when the seizure is under attachment, by coming into court in the attachment case, filing his plea claiming the property, and recovering judgment for its restitution.[30] On the other hand, however, it has been held that, where a claimant of property levied on under process against another resorts to the statutory remedy to try the right of property, this amounts to a waiver of his remedy by action against the levying officer;[31] but a provision in a statute providing a method of trying the right of a third person to property levied on under attachment that a claim made by one intervening under the statute shall operate as a release of damages for making the levy, being in derogation of common law, will not be extended to claims otherwise made,[32] and where one to whom attached property had been assigned by the debtor was made defendant in the attachment and he answered, claiming title and right of possession, a judgment restoring the property to him did not bar an action by him against the sheriff for the trespass.[33]

Application of proceeds of property. Where an officer has made a wrongful seizure of property, he cannot escape liability[34] or even reduce the amount of his liability, as discussed infra § 75, by showing that the proceeds of the property or a part thereof was applied to the payment of the debts of the owner; and the fact that a sheriff, after taking and selling exempt property under execution, deposited with the justice who issued the execution the surplus proceeds, which the owner might, if he chose, have demanded and received, has been held not to affect the owner's right in an action against the sheriff for wrongfully taking the property, where he had not received the money.[35]

Return or offer to return property. An officer cannot escape liability for a wrongful seizure of property by returning it to the owner,[36] or by an offer to restore or an actual return without acceptance,[37] but such return can avail only to mitigate the damages which would otherwise be recoverable, as discussed infra § 75; and, even though the owner agrees to receive the property in settlement of the claim, defendant will not be discharged from liability if the owner repudiates such agreement before all the property is returned.[38] So, where a return of exempt property is demanded, and a reasonable time for its return is allowed before bringing action, a return of the property by the sheriff after commencement of the action will not relieve him from liability,[39] although it may be shown in mitigation of damages as discussed infra § 75. In any event, a sheriff cannot relieve himself from liability for a wrongful seizure of property by a mere paper release of the levy without a restoration of the property,[40] but in order to relieve the officer there must be a formal release of the property and an acceptance of it by the owner[41] or by some one authorized by him to receive it.[42] Moreover, the return must be made to the place from which the property was taken, or to some place which the owner might reasonably designate.[43]

Where personal property attached on a writ was surrendered to defendant therein, at his request and for his convenience, on the substitution of an equivalent in money, it was held that defendant could not maintain an action against the officer for the wrongful attachment of such property, although the writ was not returned to court.[44] Where a purchaser under a conditional sale contract has possession of the property, and a sheriff, on levying thereon under an attachment against such purchaser, does not take manual possession of the property, and thereafter releases it from the levy, leaving it in the the possession of the purchaser, he is not liable to the conditional seller for its subsequent loss.[45]

Sale of property by owner. Where, after a levy under execution on property not belonging to defendant, the true owner sells such property to defendant, he parts with his right of action against the officer for the making of such levy,[46] and such right of action cannot be reinvested in the original owner by a resale to him by the execution debtor before a sale under the execution.[47]

Relinquishment of claim to damages. Where the goods of one person are attached on a writ against another person, and subsequently again attached on another writ in favor of a different creditor, a release by the owner of all claim to damages in consequence of the second attachment in consideration of its relinquishment has no effect on his right to recover damages for the first taking.[48]

Withdrawal of claim to property. A person whose goods are taken by a sheriff in proceedings of claim and delivery against another person can maintain an action against the sheriff for damages, although, after giving the sheriff notice of his claim, he withdrew it to enable the sheriff to deliver the goods.[49]

§ 73. Extent of Liability

The liability of a sheriff or constable for a wrongful levy on, or taking of, property includes the damages which arise as a direct and proximate result of the wrongful act.

The liability of a sheriff or constable for a wrongful levy on, or taking of, property includes the damages which arise as a direct and proximate result of the wrongful act;[50] there is no liability for damages which are too remote and uncertain.[51]

§ 74. —— Measure and Elements of Recovery

a. In general
b. Injury to business and credit; loss of profits
c. Counsel fees; interest

a. In General

As a general rule, the sheriff or constable is liable to the owner of property wrongfully seized for the value of the property where the property is not restored to the owner; but where the owner recovers the property he is considered as having received it in mitigation of damages, and the measure of damages is the expense of procuring its return and any other special damage which may be shown, such as depreciation of value or loss of use.

As a general rule, where property wrongfully seized by a sheriff is not restored to the owner, the sheriff or constable is liable to such owner, whether he is the general owner, or has only a special ownership,[52] for the value of the property[53] at the time of the seizure[54] and at the place where the property was when seized,[55] although where property is wrongfully seized while in transit the measure of damages is the value of the property at the time at the place of consignment, less the charges of the carrier for delivering it there.[56] If the property has such a value, the value to be taken is its fair market value,[57] not the value of the goods in the retail market[58] or the amount received on a sale by the officer,[59] although the officer cannot object that the value of the property is less than the amount received on the sale.[60] However, the market value will not be adhered to as the absolute measure of recovery where to do so would be a departure from the more fundamental principle of just compensation for the loss sustained,[61] and if the property is of greater value as in use than as property being sold on the market the measure of damages is the value of the property as in use.[62]

Ordinarily plaintiff cannot, in addition to the value of the property, recover the value of its use or hire after the seizure,[63] although, on the other hand, it has been held that he may, instead of interest from the time of the taking, recover the value of the use of the property for the same period.[64] According to some cases a fair compensation for the time and money expended in pursuit of the property is recoverable,[65] although some authorities have held that a successful claimant of property seized under attachment is not entitled to recover for expenses incurred in defending his title where the seizure was not attended by any willful wrong or oppression.[66] Where, after property is wrongfully seized from plaintiff, it is taken from the sheriff or constable by one claiming under a paramount title, the damages recoverable by plaintiff from the sheriff or constable are measured not by the value of the property, but by the injury caused by its actual detention by the officer from the date of the levy until it is taken from him.[67] A tenant ousted under a void writ issued against the landlord may recover damages for the humiliation suffered.[68]

Where owner regains possession. Where the owner recovers his property, he is considered as having received it in mitigation of damages,[69] and the measure of damages is the expense of procuring its return.[70] Where plaintiff has repurchased his property, the measure of damages is the amount paid by him therefor,[71] together with the expenses of procuring a deed,[72] and any other special or substantial damage which may be shown;[73] and if the property depreciates in value while withheld by the sheriff or constable he is liable for such depreciation.[74] The sheriff cannot object that the sum paid for the return of the property exceeds its value;[75] but, on the other hand, it has been held that the sum recoverable cannot exceed such value.[76] Apart from the expense of regaining possession, if it appears that the property has a usable value, the sheriff or constable is liable for the value of the use of the property during the time of its detention by him,[77] or a reasonable amount for the loss of use,[78] unless the circumstances were such that the seizure did not deprive the owner of the use of his property,[79] together with the amount of any damage to the property occasioned by the officer or his agents while it was under seizure.[80] Where the property seized is kept for sale rather than for use, the measure of damages is the diminution of the value of the property by reason of its seizure and detention.[81]

Seizure of mortgaged or pledged property. Where mortgaged property is wrongfully seized and thereby lost to the mortgagee, he is entitled to recover from the sheriff or constable the amount of his mortgage if the property is worth so much,[82] or the value of the property if it is worth less than the mortgage debt,[83] together with compensation for the loss of time and expenses properly incurred in pursuit of the property in either case.[84] In an action by a pledgee against a sheriff for a conversion of goods pledged, if the sheriff has seized them under a lawful writ in his hands, he will be treated as in privity with the owner, the pledgor, provided he has pursued the law in making such seizure, and will be held only for plaintiff's special interest in the goods,[85] but in any other event he will be treated as a stranger and held for their full value.[86]

Seizure of property subject to landlord's lien. Where a sheriff or constable seizes and sells property which is subject to a landlord's lien, by reason of which the lien is lost, the measure of damages is the value of the property,[87] unless such value exceeds the amount of rent due, in which case the latter amount is the measure of damages [88]

Seizure of property subject to factor's or carrier's lien. Where goods of an owner in possession of a factor or agent to sell who has a lien for advances are taken out of his possession under an attachment against the owner, the sheriff or constable is liable for the whole value of the goods if the lien exceeds such value.[89] So, where a sheriff takes goods from the possession of a carrier having a lien for freight charges, and does not give the indemnity required by statute, he is, in the absence of bad faith on the part of the carrier, a trespasser, and the carrier is entitled to recover the full value of the goods and to hold it as security for his lien in lieu of the property [90]

Seizure of property in custody of law. A sheriff or constable who seizes and sells property which at the time of the seizure was in the custody of another officer under a prior seizure is liable to the latter officer for the value of such property.[91]

b. Injury to Business and Credit; Loss of Profits

It has been both affirmed and denied that in an action against a sheriff for wrongfully seizing property the injury to the plaintiff's business and credit or loss of profits may properly be considered as an element of damages.

In an action against a sheriff for wrongfully seizing property, it has been held that the injury to plaintiff's business[92] and credit[93] may properly be considered although it has been held in some cases that no recovery can be had for such injury,[94] and in others that recovery therefor can be awarded only where there is a willful and wanton trespass, or trespass marked by some circumstance of malice, oppression, or fraud.[95] In an action against a sheriff by a merchant for wrongful seizure of part of his stock in trade, by reason of which he was compelled to discontinue business and sell the balance of his stock for less than its value, the loss resulting from the sale of such balance was held too remote a consequence of the levy to form the basis of an assessment of damages.[96]

Loss of profits. Loss of prospective profits as an element of damage in an action for a wrongful seizure of plaintiff's stock in trade has been both affirmed[97] and denied.[98]

c. Counsel Fees; Interest

One whose property has been wrongfully seized cannot recover from the sheriff or constable the attorney's fees which he has incurred and paid in asserting or defending his claim to the property, at least where there is no element of fraud, malice, or oppression. Interest on the amount of the loss may properly be allowed.

One whose property has been wrongfully seized cannot recover from the sheriff or constable the attorney's fees which he has incurred and paid in asserting or defending his claim to the property,[99] at least where there is no element of fraud, malice, or oppression.[1] In like manner, the fee of the attorney who brings the action for the wrongful seizure cannot be allowed as part of the damages [2]

Interest on the amount of the loss is properly allowed in a suit against a sheriff for seizing goods under process against another[3] or for seizing exempt property under process against the owner.[4]

§ 75. —— Reduction or Mitigation of Damages

As a general rule a sheriff or constable is entitled to show in reduction or mitigation of damages any facts or circumstances which would tend to reduce the amount required justly to compensate for the actual loss sustained as the proximate result of the officer's unlawful act.

As a general rule a sheriff or constable is entitled to show in reduction or mitigation of damages any facts or circumstances which would tend to reduce the amount required justly to compensate for the actual loss sustained as the proximate result of the officer's unlawful act[5] In an action for levying on goods which were exempt from execution, a sheriff or constable may show, in mitigation of damages, that the debtor had other property, exceeding in value the amount of his exemption, which he fraudulently withheld from levy.[6] Where the right to property is tried by a sheriff's jury, a finding that the property belongs to defendant in the process, and is subject to levy, may be shown in mitigation of damages.[7] Where a sheriff or constable seized plaintiff's property under void process against a third person, it was held that the facts that he retained possession for several months and then sold the property under an execution issued in another action could not be shown in mitigation of damages.[8] The tender of a part of the value of property sold under void process does not entitle the sheriff to a mitigation of damages.[9]

Seizure of property beyond jurisdiction. It has been held that a constable who is sued for taking property out of his precinct by virtue of mesne process may show, in mitigation of damages, that, having taken the property to a place within his precinct, he attached it there, on the same process, as the property of the same debtor, subsequently to the commencement of the action against him.[10]

Return or offer to return property. A return of the property to the owner after wrongful seizure can be shown in mitigation of damages.[11] So where, after a levy on exempt property, its return is demanded, and a reasonable time for the return is allowed before bringing an action against the officer, a return of the property after the commencement of the action may be shown in reduction of damages.[12] There is authority for the view that the owner of the property has the right to refuse to receive it when the officer offers to return it, in which case such offer cannot avail even to mitigate the damages,[13] at least where the officer does not show that the goods tendered back had subsequently and continuously been held for the owner's benefit;[14] but it has also been held that, where a sheriff offers to restore property wrongfully levied on, he is not liable for its value but only for the temporary detention,[15] provided he follows up his tender by an application for a stay of proceedings on restoration of the property and an offer to pay plaintiff the damages he has sustained[16] If all the property levied on is exempt, a return of part of the property relieves the officer from liability only pro tanto.[17] A mere paper release of the levy without a restoration of the property will not reduce the damages for the temporary detention.[18]

Application of proceeds of property. A sheriff or constable cannot reduce the amount of his liability by showing that the proceeds or a part thereof were applied to the payment of the debts of the owner[19] unless such application was with the consent of the owner[20] or unless the debt paid was a valid and subsisting lien by way of mortgage on the property applied to the payment thereof.[21] So the fact that a claimant of property attached as that of a debtor obtains a judgment on appeal directing the clerk of the trial court to turn over to claimant the proceeds of the sale does not prevent him from receiving the value of the property, undiminished by the proceeds of sale, where the clerk does not comply with the judgment because it has in the meanwhile been paid over to plaintiff in attachment on the judgment recovered in the trial court.[22]

In an action against a sheriff for seizing and selling plaintiff's property under process against another, the fact that the surplus proceeds of the sale were paid over to plaintiff as agent of the execution defendant is not available in reduction of damages.[23] So also in an action against a sheriff by an administrator with the will annexed for seizing the goods of the testator, while in the hands of the administrator pendente lite, under an execution against such administrator for his personal debt, the sheriff cannot reduce the damages by showing that he had paid the administrator pendente lite the surplus of money arising from the sales which remained after satisfying the execution.[24] However, even though the original taking was wrongful, if the property is afterward legally taken and sold on execution against the owner and the proceeds applied to his debt, this will reduce the damages to such only as resulted from the wrongful taking and preclude inquiry as to the value of the property.[25] On the other hand, where plaintiff's exempt property was levied on and sold under execution against another person, it was held that the proceeds could not be applied, in reduction of damages, to an execution subsequently issued against plaintiff.[26]

§ 76. —— Nominal Damages

Nominal damages may be recovered where there has been a wrongful seizure of property by a sheriff or constable, although it is shown that there were no actual damages.

Nominal damages may be recovered where there has been a wrongful seizure of property by a sheriff or constable, although it is shown that there were no actual damages.[27] Where a sheriff or constable takes goods from the possession of one person under an execution against another, the former is entitled at least to nominal damages for the trespass to his possession even though the taking was authorized by the real owner.[28] On the other hand, it has been held that, where a plaintiff in replevin accepts delivery of the goods and ratifies the seizure, the sheriff or constable is not liable even for nominal damages.[29] If the owner of exempt property, being present at the time it is sold under execution, makes no objection to the sale, and consents to the application of the proceeds to his debt, he can recover only nominal damages from the sheriff for the unlawful seizure.[30] So, where a sheriff or constable, after attaching as the property of the debtor goods which the latter had sold, turns them over to one claiming to act for the debtor in settling the attachment claims, the buyer can recover from the officer only nominal damages for his unlawful temporary possession, which did not affect the manner of settling the claims.[31]

In an action against the sheriff for a wrongful levy on exempt property, the fact that the jury found that the property was mortgaged for more than its value does not prevent the owner from recovering more than nominal damages, where the sheriff had sold the property for a considerable sum and there was no finding that he did not require the purchaser to comply with the mortgage conditions as provided by statute.[32] Where levy of attachment is made by a mere indorsement on the writ, without disturbing the property, the sheriff is liable only for nominal damages if the levy proves to be wrongful,[33] even though the property is subsequently sold under order of court as perishable.[34] interferes with the latter's possession is liable only for nominal damages, if the first execution is subsequently satisfied by the sale of part of the property levied on.[35]

§ 77. —— Exemplary Damages

Where a sheriff or constable acts maliciously in making a wrongful levy, he is liable for exemplary damages.

Where a sheriff or constable acts maliciously in making a wrongful levy, he is liable for exemplary damages,[36] but if he does not act maliciously he is not so liable;[37] and where the sheriff or constable takes only the steps necessary to secure the delivery of the property, should he find that it actually belongs to the party against whom the writ is directed, he is liable only for the actual damages sustained.[38] Malice may be implied for the purpose of awarding exemplary damages if it appears that the sheriff or constable seized the property when he knew that it was exempt and that he had no right to levy on it,[39] although this inference may be rebutted by evidence that he acted under advice of counsel.[40] Where a statute makes it the duty of the sheriff or constable to levy on and sell property when indemnified by the execution plaintiff, he cannot be made liable in exemplary damages for such a levy and sale merely because he knew that the property was exempt.[41]

Mental pain or suffering. A recovery for mental pain or suffering has been allowed as an element of exemplary damages.[42]

D. LIABILITIES ARISING OUT OF CUSTODY OF PROPERTY

§ 78. Loss of, or Injury to, Property

a. In general
b Degree of care required
c. Loss or injury through act or negligence of custodian or receiptor

a. In General

A sheriff or constable who has property in his custody or under his control is not an insurer of its safety, and as a general rule if the property is lost, destroyed, or damaged without neglect on his part he is not liable.

A sheriff or constable who has property in his custody or under his control is not an insurer of its safety,[43] and as a general rule if the property is lost, destroyed, or damaged without neglect on his part, he is not liable,[44] although in some jurisdictions it is held that a sheriff cannot escape liability unless the loss or injury is due to an act of God, the public enemy, or some irresistible accident.[45] A sheriff or constable who removes goods under a writ of restoration in forcible entry and detainer proceedings has been held not liable for injury to the goods occurring subsequent to the removal.[46]

If loss or injury is due to the failure of the sheriff or constable to exercise proper care and diligence, the sheriff or constable is liable;[47] and property is

Failure to guard, keep, or protect
(1) Fact that owners of crane left it where it was levied on, unguarded and unprotected, is not, of itself, material in determining whether sheriff was negligent in leaving crane unguarded and unprotected after levy.—State, to Use of Henderson, v. Clark, 20 A 2d 127, 2 Terry, Del., 246, 138 A.L R. 704.
(2) Sheriff who in attaching growing crop of lettuce did not require attaching creditor to deposit fees for keeper was liable to attaching creditor for loss of crop which was sold by debtor.—Huston v. Abbott, 85 P 2d 518, 30 Cal.App.2d 5.
(3) Where sheriff levied writ of attachment against vessel and then left it at place of moorage without lost within this rule where it goes beyond the reach of the party for whom it was the duty of the sheriff to keep it available.[48] The issuance of a venditioni exponas is not a prerequisite to an action against a sheriff who has negligently permitted the removal of goods levied on.[49]

Property stolen from sheriff. Where property in the sheriff's custody or control is stolen without negligence on his part, he is not liable for the loss,[50] although a view to the contrary obtains in some jurisdictions where the officer is held liable unless the loss of the property in his custody is due to the act of God, the public enemy, or some irresistible accident.[51]

Return of stolen property to owner. Where, pending an action for recovery of stolen property, the sheriff is holding it for plaintiff without legal process, he commits no legal wrong against plaintiff by surrendering the property to another claimant, not a party to the action, where the sheriff would have been liable to such claimant for conversion if the latter was in fact the owner.[52]

Possession taken by receiver. A sheriff who is in possession of goods by virtue of a levy made under writs of attachment is not liable to a subsequent chattel mortgagee for conversion, when a receiver, duly appointed by the court from which the attachments issued, takes exclusive possession and control of the goods, sells them, and receives the proceeds.[53]

Duty of sheriff to retake property taken from him. If goods which a sheriff has attached are taken from him, it is his duty to retake them, by force, if necessary, or by replevin, or obtain their value in an action for conversion, failing in which he is liable for the loss[54]

Effect of change in incumbency Failure of a retiring sheriff or constable to deliver to his successor all the property appertaining to his office, where there is no direct evidence of assumption of possession by the successor, renders the outgoing officer liable to the owner for the care of the property[55] An actual delivery of property to the new sheriff is sufficient to make him liable therefor and relieve the retiring sheriff from liability,[56] although a receipt provided for by statute is not taken;[57] and even an offer of the sheriff, on expiration of his term of office, to deliver property to his successor discharges him from future responsibility for the safe-keeping of the property.[58]

Liability to subsequent creditors of property owner. Where a sheriff so negligently conducts himself in respect of personal property levied on by him that it is lost, and the execution is satisfied out of the real estate of defendant, whereby the security of subsequent mortgage creditors on the real estate of defendant in the execution is reduced, no action lies by such mortgage creditors against the sheriff for such malfeasance unless there has been a fraudulent intent to diminish their security[59]

Loss of, or injury to, property not taken. Where the sheriff levies on only part of a debtor's property he is not liable, in the absence of negligence, for loss of property of which he has not taken possession[60] However, a sheriff who falsely represents draining water pipes of vessel when weather conditions were such that sheriff should reasonably have foreseen that pipes containing water might freeze and burst, and as result of sheriff's failure to drain water pipes they froze and broke, causing damage to vessel, sheriff was guilty of negligence and liable for damages.—Capper v Callahan, 239 P. 2d 541, 39 Wash 2d 882.

Theft of pawned article from pawnshop

(1) Where writ of fieri facias issued on judgment against loan company was levied on only part of the property in company's pawnshop, none of pawned goods being taken into possession of sheriff, sheriff's consent to keeping shop open during day for convenience of those who had pledged articles on loans did not charge sheriff with negligence imposing on him liability for theft of pledged diamond ring, which occurred while sheriff's watchman was on premises in possession of goods under levy.—Commonwealth, to Use of French v. Weglein, supra.

(2) Fact that sheriff discontinued service of burglar alarms on safes was not proximate cause of loss of ring from safe by theft during business hours, so as to render sheriff liable therefor to pledgor, where alarm system in the usual course of company's business never had been connected during business hours.—Commonwealth, to Use of French, v. Weglein, supra.

to the debtor that he has attached certain property, and refuses to permit the debtor to take care of the property, may be liable for the loss of the property.[61] A sheriff is not liable in the absence of negligence for damage to household articles which he and his assistants are removing from premises under a writ of restitution valid on its face.[62] So, where an officer acting under a writ of sequestration of a house and lot exercises ordinary care in the removal of defendant's effects from the premises, he is not liable for injuries resulting to the property in consequence of the removal.[63]

Necessity for demand. Where the sheriff negligently loses property in his official custody, no demand for a restoration thereof is necessary to support an action by the owner [64]

Liability as trespasser ab initio. With respect to the care and management of personal property levied on, much must be left to the judgment of the officer,[65] and there are many irregularities for which the officer would be liable in damages to an aggrieved party, but which would not render him a trespasser from the beginning by relation.[66] The rule as to this is that the officer will not, by reason of his disposition or management of personal property before sale, become a trespasser ab initio unless there has been a substantial violation of the legal rights of the party, of such a character as to show a gross or wanton disregard of duty on the part of the officer.[67]

b. Degree of Care Required

In protecting property under seizure and in his custody, a sheriff or constable is held to the exercise of ordinary or reasonable care.

In protecting property under seizure and in his custody, a sheriff or constable is held to the exercise of ordinary[68] or reasonable[69] care, that is, the same degree of care which a careful and prudent man would be likely to exercise over his own property[70] of a like class or nature,[71] and this rule applies to the officer's statutory duty to regain possession of property which has passed out of his possession.[72] Where a boat is attached and articles left in the boat, but not a part of it, go into the officer's possession along with the boat, his responsibility for such articles is merely that of a gratuitous bailee.[73]

c. Loss or Injury through Act or Negligence of Custodian or Receiptor

A sheriff who has property in his official custody is liable for a loss of, or injury to, the property resulting from the default or negligence of a keeper or custodian whom he has placed in charge of the property. Where a sheriff delivers attached property to a receiptor, he does so at his own risk.

Due care

Since officer obtaining right to possession of property attached under statute providing for bulky article attachments has duty of due care to protect property even though he does not have actual possession, that care must be exercised in pursuing property after he has learned of its removal without his consent as well as before.—Claremont Gas Light Co. v. levied on in the debtor's possession, and it is taken beyond the jurisdiction of the court, so that plaintiffs in execution lose a portion of their debt, the sheriff is liable for the damages sustained, since his responsibility for property levied on continues as long as he can keep possession under the execution.[75]

Delivery of property to receiptor. A sheriff who has attached property and delivered it to a third person on his own responsibility and for his own convenience, and taken an accountable receipt therefor, is not thereby relieved from liability to the parties, but remains liable by virtue of the attachment for the safe-keeping and legal disposition of the property.[76] Thus, where a sheriff delivers attached goods to a receiptor, he does so at his own risk unless the taking of the receipt is directed or ratified by the creditor, and is liable for their safe-keeping;[77] but a sheriff is not liable for the negligence of a receiptor to whom he has delivered the attached property by direction of plaintiff in the attachment.[78]

An officer attaching goods on mesne process, and delivering them to a bailee nominated by plaintiff, is not responsible to plaintiff for the fidelity of such bailee,[79] but it has been stated that a sheriff in selecting the creditor's nominee as bailee of the goods attached is liable to any third person sustaining loss by reason of any default in the manner in which the writ was executed.[80] So it has been held that an officer who attaches goods under a writ, and deposits them for safe-keeping with a bailee, who converts them to his own use without the knowledge or consent of the officer, is not liable for the conversion.[81] Furthermore, the officer is not liable when the property attached by him and placed in the custody of a warehouseman, with the consent of the attachment plaintiff, is taken from the warehouseman under a valid chattel mortgage.[82]

Particular matters which have been held to affect or not to affect the liability of a sheriff or constable for the loss of, or injury to, property in his custody include an absence of injury to the complaining party, the propriety of the levy, the validity of judgment or process, acts or omissions of the parties, and withdrawal of the attachment suit.

A sheriff cannot be held liable for failure to retain possession of property seized by him unless such failure has resulted in some injury to the complaining party.[83] Where an officer is charged by the original debtor with having lost or wasted a portion of the goods which he has attached, it is competent for him to excuse himself from liability by showing that he has applied the amount to the use of the debtor by paying with it the expenses of keeping the goods,[84] but where a sheriff has become liable to an execution plaintiff by the loss of property levied on he cannot escape liability by a subsequent levy of the execution on other property, which fails to yield enough for its satisfaction.[85] In a suit against a sheriff for not retaining and selling on execution property on which it has been attempted to enforce a lien claim, if no judgment confirming the validity of the lien appears on record it is competent for him to show, in defense, that the lien did not exist or that it has been lost.[86]

Propriety of levy. Where the officer levies on the property of one person under process against another and takes possession of the property, he is liable to the owner for the loss thereof, although such loss was not due to his fault;[87] but no such liability accrues where the officer did not take possession of the property levied on, and the loss was not attributable to his fault or to the making of the levy.[88] A sheriff is not liable to account to the creditor for property attached on his suit where that property did not belong to the debtor,[89] or was exempt from attachment,[90] unless it was attached by consent of the owner.[91] So also in an action by a surety against a sheriff for failing to keep the property of the principal, which was levied on, whereby the surety was compelled to pay more than he otherwise would have paid, it is a sufficient defense that the property was replevied by another person who, in an action whereof the surety herein had due notice, was adjudged to be the owner.[92]

Validity of judgment or process. A sheriff who is sued for neglect safely to keep attached property cannot impeach the validity of plaintiff's judgment in the attachment suit in order to escape liability;[93] and where an execution is not void the fact that it is irregular does not relieve the sheriff of liability for the loss of property levied on thereunder.[94] The statutory affidavit, order, and undertaking in a claim and delivery action constitute the process under which the sheriff takes the property making him liable for the subsequent negligent loss,[95] and the fact that the owner of the property in such action failed promptly to demand possession from the sheriff does not release the sheriff from liability for the subsequent negligent loss.[96]

Acts or omissions of parties. The consent of the owner of property to its destruction by a sheriff relieves the latter from liability to such owner;[97] and an attaching creditor, knowing the circumstances, and assenting to what is done, is estopped to claim that the officer's act in leaving the property in the care of a keeper was negligent.[98] A sheriff who levies execution on the property of a judgment debtor is not liable for a loss resulting by reason of obeying the unlawful directions of the judgment creditor.[99] So, where the parties restrain the sheriff by orders or agreements so that he has no control over property which he has been ordered to seize and keep, and loss results from such orders or agreements, there can be no recourse against the sheriff therefor.[1] However, it has been held that where a sheriff, on attaching a vessel lying at a wharf, does not put a custodian in charge because plaintiff's attorney informed the officer that it would not be necessary, the latter is not thereby excused from using reasonable care to recover possession of the vessel after it has sailed for another port.[2]

Withdrawal of suit. The withdrawal of an attachment suit is a bar to a recovery by plaintiff therein against the sheriff for neglect to preserve the property under his attachment,[3] although the suit is revived at the same term and judgment entered against defendant therein.[4]

§ 80. Release of Property Levied on

A sheriff who wrongfully releases a levy and surrenders the property is liable to the party at whose instance the process was issued for the resulting damage.

A sheriff or constable who wrongfully releases a levy and surrenders the property is liable to the party at whose instance the process was issued for the resulting damage,[5] and in order to escape liability the officer must affirmatively show that he parted with the possession of the property under the order of a court of competent jurisdiction[6] or that the writ under which he levied could not legally have been enforced.[7] An order for the sale of attached property is not essential to render the sheriff or constable liable for releasing the attachment, it being sufficient that an execution has issued on the judgment.[8]

Release on bond. Where the statute allows defendant to dissolve the levy and secure the return of the property by giving bond, the sheriff incurs no liability by releasing the property on a sufficient

Where the action of the sheriff in permitting a bailee of attached property to use the property was induced by the acts or request of the attachment creditor's attorneys, acting within the scope of their authority, the attachment creditor is estopped to claim from the sheriff damages for injury to the property while in the bailee's possession.—Callihan v Montrief, Tex Civ App., 71 S.W.2d 564, error refused.

bond being given,[9] but a sheriff or constable who fails to take the required bond before releasing the seized property subjects himself to liability for damages,[10] notwithstanding the sheriff's additional fee for making the particular levy to which he was entitled by statute had not been paid in advance,[11] and he is liable if he releases the property on a bond which is invalid on its face[12] or if he fails to comply with the law in returning the release bond.[13] Furthermore, it has been held that a sheriff who, without an order of court, releases property provisionally seized, on a bond not accepted by plaintiff in the writ, is liable for the amount of the seizure.[14] Where the sheriff delivers property levied on under execution to a claimant on a forthcoming bond pursuant to statute, he is not liable where the property is found subject to the writ and not forthcoming.[15]

An execution plaintiff who consents to a release of the property by the sheriff on a forthcoming bond given by defendant cannot hold the sheriff liable for following his directions,[16] and a suit brought by plaintiff on the bond, accepted by the sheriff, who delivers the property to the debtor, is a ratification of the sheriff's act in taking the bond,[17] although the sheriff, after the release, and without plaintiff's consent, has taken a substitute bond on which no suit was ever brought.[18] Where the statute provides for redelivery of property to defendant in replevin on giving bond, and declares that a sheriff who delivers to either party, without the consent of the other, a chattel replevied by him, except as prescribed by the statute, shall be liable in damages to the party aggrieved, if the sureties in a redelivery bond given by defendant have justified, and the bond is approved by the court and the sheriff exonerated from further liability pursuant to statute, plaintiff in the replevin suit is not aggrieved within the meaning of the statute because the sheriff mistakenly delivered the property to defendant before the sureties had justified.[19] If a replevin suit is illegally brought to recover possession of property in possession of a sheriff under a writ of seizure, the sheriff is liable for surrendering the property on a forthcoming bond given in the replevin suit.[20]

Particular matters which have been held to affect or not to affect the liability of a sheriff or constable for releasing property include the validity of the attachment, ownership of the property, exemption of the property, failure or refusal to indemnify the officer, bankruptcy or insolvency of the debtor, dissolution or expiration of the writ, judicial proceedings affecting right of possession, and directions of a party or his attorney.

A plaintiff in attachment cannot hold a sheriff liable for releasing property unless there was a valid attachment[21] and actual levy on the property under the writ.[22] Thus, where a levy is void because the property is already in the custody of the law under a prior levy, the officer is not liable for allowing the property to be taken away by the purchaser at a sale under the first levy.[23] The surrender of property seized on attachment to a person

Where seller gave buyer bill of sale to automobile to prevent sheriff from levying attachment on automobile, but sheriff had notice from both buyer and seller that automobile was buyer's, and buyer filed cross bond to replevy automobile after levy of attachment on automobile, sheriff did not wrongfully convert automobile when, without consent and knowledge of seller, it was turned over to buyer on acceptance of his cross bond.—Hubacek v. Omissions in bond

Replevy bond taken by sheriff which omitted name of obligee and date for redelivery of property levied on in attachment was not statutory bond and sheriff's taking such bond rather than required statutory bond on redelivering property to defendant in attachment was breach of sheriff's official bond making him liable.—Campbell v. claiming to act as agent of the attachment defendant pursuant to a settlement relieves the sheriff from liability to the true owner of the property who had knowledge of all the facts and accepted payment of a part of his claim;[24] but where plaintiff in execution indemnifies the sheriff against a third-party claim by giving an undertaking pursuant to statute he cannot defend an action for wrongful release of the goods on the ground that he rejected the sureties as insufficient[25]

Ownership of property. It is a sufficient excuse for a release of property levied on that such property did not belong to defendant in the process under which it was seized, but to the person by whom it was claimed and to whom it was released,[26] and the receipt of an indemnity bond by the sheriff before making the levy will not preclude him from showing that the property was not subject to seizure under the writ[27] It has been held that a sheriff is not liable to a judgment creditor for releasing property seized on execution which was claimed by a third person without complying with the statutes relating to a trial of the right to seized property.[28] Where, however, a sheriff levies on property, and leaves it with a third-party claimant who receipts for it, and who is in fact the owner, and the sheriff recovers judgment against him on failure to deliver, the sheriff is estopped, in an action by the judgment creditor, to show that the goods did not belong to the judgment debtor.[29]

Exemption of property. A sheriff who has levied on exempt property incurs no liability by releasing it,[30] and cannot be held liable on the ground that plaintiff's debt was contracted before the enactment of the exemption law unless it be shown that the sheriff had notice, actual or implied, of that fact.[31]

Failure or refusal to indemnify sheriff. Where property levied on by a sheriff is claimed by a third person and the sheriff demands indemnity, which is refused, he is not liable for releasing the property,[32] but where he did not demand indemnity he cannot escape liability for releasing the property because of the fact that none was given[33] On the other hand, the refusal of claimant to give an indemnity bond on demand will not relieve the sheriff from liability where there is no statute authorizing the sheriff to demand such bond.[34]

Bankruptcy or insolvency of debtor. Where a sheriff has seized goods under a writ of sequestration issued by a state court to enforce a vendor's lien, he is liable for releasing them, without an order of the state court or consent of plaintiff in the writ, to a trustee appointed in bankruptcy proceedings begun subsequently to the seizure under the writ,[35] but under an insolvency statute a sheriff or constable has been held not liable for delivering attached property to the debtor's assignee in insolvency[36] even though the insolvency proceedings were subsequently annulled[37] It has been held under particular statutory provisions that whether the debtor is insolvent so as to render the sheriff not liable for a release of the levy depends on a judicial determination, not the sheriff's determination.[38] A sheriff who has levied on the interest of one partner on the suit of his separate or individual creditors, may, without liability, release the levy when the partnership is insolvent and the sale of the partner's interest would not have satisfied the execution.[39] Where a sheriff has wrongfully released property levied on under execution the execution plaintiff does not lose his right of action against the sheriff by proving his claim against the bankrupt estate of the execution debtor and accepting a dividend.[40]

Dissolution of writ. Since it is the duty of the officer to return the attached property to defendant in the writ, when the attachment is dissolved, as discussed in Attachment § 472, the sheriff is not liable to the attachment plaintiff for failure to hold the property in order to give plaintiff time to appeal and file a supersedeas[41] even though on a subsequent appeal the order dissolving the attachment is reversed;[42] and the existence of a stipulation that plaintiff should, on dissolution of the attachment, have time to appeal and give a supersedeas bond is immaterial if the officer was not a party to the stipulation.[43]

Expiration of writ. A sheriff is not liable for failure to keep attached property where no execution is issued or no demand for the property is made on him by the attaching creditor until after the expiration of the period after judgment for which the sheriff is entitled to hold the goods under the attachment,[44] and this is true although before the judgment the sheriff had accepted a receiptor and relinquished the property.[45]

Judicial proceedings affecting right of possession. When a sheriff holds, under attachment, property seized as that of the attachment debtor, and the court in which the attachment suits are pending appoints a receiver in a suit commenced to determine conflicting rights in the property and directs such property to be turned over to him, such taking of the property from the sheriff's possession is a proper defense in an action against him, by plaintiff in one of the attachment suits, for an unauthorized release of the attached property;[46] and where a sheriff levies an execution on goods, and, an injunction being served on him, redelivers the goods, he is not liable to plaintiff, although no security has actually been given for the injunction.[47] So also a sheriff who has levied an execution on personal property and has been deprived of the possession thereof by writ of replevin at the suit of a claimant is not liable for the debt and damages on the motion of the judgment creditor,[48] even though the creditor has given the sheriff indemnity.[49]

Payment of amount claimed in writ. The sheriff who makes the attachment incurs no liability to plaintiff by releasing the property on defendant's payment to him of the amount of the claim as stated in the writ, and costs,[50] although the amount of the claim is understated through mistake and plaintiff afterward recovers a judgment for a larger amount.[51]

Directions of party or his attorney. Plaintiff in attachment is not entitled to recover damages from the sheriff because of the alleged wrongful release of the attached property, where plaintiff's attorney has told the sheriff to release the attached property,[52] but, where an attorney for an execution creditor authorizes the sheriff to retain the execution until requested to make return, the authority to retain the execution beyond the return-day does not relieve the sheriff from liability for releasing the levy and failing to retain possession of the property.[53] Where the statute provides that no direction by a party with respect to the execution of process shall excuse the sheriff from liability for neglect or misconduct unless in writing, etc., a sheriff levying attachment on real estate cannot show oral instructions by the attaching creditor to release the levy on the real property and place it on certain money held in escrow, so as to relieve himself from liability to the creditor for the amount of judgment not satisfied because of such release.[54] surety by delivery of the property to the principal debtor, failure to deliver the property to the particular person entitled thereto, wrongful conversion of the property to his own use or permitting a third person to use the property, and wrongful holding possession of premises containing goods seized under process.

Where a sheriff or constable has taken possession of property under mesne process, and plaintiff is successful in the action, he is liable if he fails to have the property forthcoming to satisfy final process issued on behalf of plaintiff[55] unless it appears that the property did not belong to the debtor[56] or was not subject to sale on final process,[57] or the mesne process has been dissolved,[58] or the facts are such that the officer's failure to produce the property cannot be attributed to his negligence or fault;[59] but the sheriff or constable holding property under attachment cannot excuse his failure to have the property forthcoming to satisfy final process by the fact that it did not belong to the debtor, but to a receiptor, where the latter is estopped to deny the debtor's title;[60] and the sheriff or constable is not exonerated because the property attached has been taken from him by a trespasser[61] or by his offer to the officer having the execution to deliver the property to him at the place of deposit, if the property is deposited at an inconvenient and unreasonable place.[62] So the approval by an attachment plaintiff of the person taken as receiptor will not excuse the sheriff from making an effort to find the property so that it may be sold on execution.[63]

Property attached by lodging a copy in the town clerk's office is in custody of the sheriff or constable and he is liable for failure to produce it unless he can excuse himself by showing that he exercised the same degree of care regarding it that is required of property taken into actual possession.[64]

A demand on the sheriff or constable or the delivery of final process to him, within the time after judgment during which the mesne process remains in force, is necessary to fix his liability for failure to have property seized on mesne process forthcoming to satisfy final process[65] unless other facts are shown which supersede the necessity of a demand,[66] and failing such demand or delivery he is not liable, although he would have been unable to produce the property if demand had been made or the process delivered to him.[67] Where a personal demand is made, under an execution, on a sheriff or constable outside his official territory, for goods previously attached by him, an unqualified refusal to deliver up such goods will render him liable to the execution creditor.[68]

Release of surety by delivery of property to principal debtor. Where a sheriff, after levying on property, delivers it to the principal debtor, thereby releasing the surety from the judgment debt, he becomes liable to the creditor, if the latter is not in fault.[69]

Failure to deliver property to person entitled thereto. When it becomes the duty of the sheriff to deliver to a particular person property of which he has taken possession in his official capacity, his failure to so deliver it is a default for which he is liable.[70] Thus a sheriff or constable who seizes property under a writ of detinue and fails to deliver it to defendant after plaintiff's failure to give a forthcoming bond, as required by statute, is liable for damages,[71] and he cannot justify his misconduct by showing that defendant did not own the property[72] or that he had only a qualified interest therein,[73] or that it was subject to mortgage,[74] or that it was subsequently adjudged to belong to plaintiff in the writ.[75]

75. Ala.—Burton v. Cefalu, 51 So. 721, 165 Ala. 362.

While a sheriff or constable executing criminal process is authorized to take possession of stolen property, he cannot retain possession for an unreasonable time without rendering himself liable to the owner for conversion,[76] but a sheriff or constable cannot be held liable for failure to return attached property to defendant on payment of the debt to plaintiff or a settlement between the parties, where no notice is given to him and the suit is not discontinued.[77] The failure of an officer to deliver goods seized by him on demand does not amount to a conversion, when he has lawfully parted with their possession,[78] and he cannot be held liable for conversion because, before the dissolution of an attachment, he refused to deliver the property to a mortgagee, who had been summoned as trustee;[79] and failure of a sheriff or constable to deliver the property to defendant on dissolution of an attachment is excused where the property is already in possession of defendant's assignee for the benefit of creditors by virtue of a replevin suit.[80] A sheriff who levies under a judgment for restitution of demised premises, and on order of plaintiff releases the levy as to all of the personal property, is not liable to the evicted defendant for the value of a crop which, after the release, defendant permitted to remain on the premises.[81] Furthermore, a sheriff or constable is not liable for failure to deliver unless the party entitled to delivery is injured thereby.[82]

It has been held that a previous demand is necessary to support an action against a sheriff for a refusal to return property in his official custody to the owner when the latter has become entitled to such return,[83] but under some statutes a demand has been held to be unnecessary.[84] A sheriff or constable may waive the right to notice of facts entitling a judgment debtor to a return of the property.[85] Where a writ of replevin enjoins the sheriff to take and deliver the goods, there must be an actual delivery, and a symbolic delivery is insufficient[86] unless plaintiff consents to such delivery.[87]

Conversion of property. A sheriff is liable for wrongfully converting property to his own use, although he originally obtained possession thereof by a lawful seizure under process.[88]

Disposition of property. A sheriff incurs no liability to a prior lienholder by turning over attached property to plaintiff on order of defendant, although he knew of the existence of the prior lien.[89] So the wrongful acts of plaintiff in replevin in concealing the goods after their delivery to him by the sheriff and refusing to surrender them impose no liability on the sheriff.[90] Where property in the hands of an agent is sequestered and there is a nonsuit in the sequestration proceedings the sheriff incurs no liability to the owner of the property by returning it to the agent;[91] and, where the interest of one tenant in common in personal property is attached, a sheriff or constable, after the attachment is dissolved, may relieve himself from liability to the debtor for the property by delivering it to the cotenant.[92]

Where the right of a sheriff to hold attached property has ceased by reason of a composition between the debtor and creditor, and the property is seized by another officer under process, without the knowledge and against the will of the sheriff, the sheriff is not liable because the debtor or his assignee is unable to get possession of the property;[93] but where a sheriff or constable who has seized property under attachment releases the lien of the attachment by turning over the property to plaintiff in the attachment he becomes a trespasser from the beginning.[94] Where property has been attached and judgment obtained, the sheriff or constable is liable for turning over the proceeds to a third person on mere notice of claim without proof of title[95]

If the court fails to acquire jurisdiction of an appeal from justice court by plaintiff in a distress warrant, a constable who turns over the distrained property to such plaintiff is liable to the owner of the property for damages.[96] So a sheriff or constable who turns over to a third person property held by him under a writ of sequestration is liable to the owner[97] and cannot, in an action by such owner to recover the value of the property, discharge his liability by returning it to plaintiff.[98]

Use of property. A sheriff or constable who uses, or allows a third person to use, personal property in his official custody ordinarily is regarded as a trespasser ab initio;[99] but it is otherwise where he does not use the property for his own benefit or the benefit of a person other than the debtor, and it is not injured by such use.[1] So it was held that, where a sheriff had the custody of slaves, the mere fact that he removed them from the parish prison to his own place did not make him liable for their hire,[2] but that he became responsible only for their forthcoming, and for the value of any benefit he might have derived from their labor.[3]

Holding possession of premises containing goods seized under process. Where a sheriff or constable seizes goods he may, without subjecting himself to liability, hold the house in which they are for such time as is reasonably sufficient to make an inventory and remove the goods,[4] or may remain in the premises for such time as is reasonably necessary to enable him to remove the goods;[5] but if he remains in, or holds possession of, the premises for a longer time he becomes liable as a trespasser,[6] and may be held liable for rent.[7] It has been held that where a sheriff wrongfully seizes goods under an attachment, and takes exclusive possession of the premises on which they are, he is liable, in an action for the wrongful seizure, for the rent of the premises for the time they are occupied by him,[8] and that, where a sheriff keeps possession of an entire building in which attached property is found, the owner is entitled to recover for loss of the use and occupation of that portion of the building not occupied by the attached property.[9] So, where a sheriff or constable who has attached the goods of a tenant by the day holds possession of the premises with the tenant's consent, he is liable for the rental value thereof after notice from the landlord to vacate.[10]

On the other hand, it has been held that a sheriff or constable who levies on the goods of a tenant and uses the demised building for the safekeeping of the goods, the lease to the tenant not being terminated, does not become liable to the landlord for the rent during such occupancy.[11] So it has been held that where property of a tenant, located in rooms of an office building which he occupied under a yearly lease, is attached and left there by the sheriff in charge of a watchman, the tenant, and not the sheriff, is liable for the rents pending a disposition of the property,[12] and that the owner of premises in which a sheriff has left the goods of the tenant after seizure or attachment cannot hold the sheriff personally liable for the rent where there was no evidence authorizing the inference that the parties intended to assume the relationship of landlord and tenant.[13]

A sheriff or constable who enters a house under process and attaches goods therein becomes a trespasser ab initio by placing therein an unfit person as keeper of the goods against the remonstrance of the owner of the house.[14] An officer who attaches personal property and summons a mortgagee as trustee of defendant, who thereupon surrenders possession of the property to the mortgagee, does not, by unreasonably keeping possession of a building of defendant in which the property is situated, render himself liable to defendant in damages for depriving him of the use of the personal property.[15]

Liability for value of use of real property under seizure. It is the duty of the sheriff when he seizes productive real estate to take at the same time all the rents, issues, and revenues which the property may yield,[16] and when he neglects to do so efficiently in a proper case, and the judgment and seizing creditor is injured thereby, the sheriff is bound to repair the damage which he has occasioned by his fault;[17] but where the sheriff seizes the residence of a defendant which is occupied by defendant, and is without power either to expel defendant or to compel him to pay rent, he cannot be held liable for the value of the use of the property.[18]

§ 83. Estoppel to Deny Lawful Possession

A sheriff or constable may be estopped to show that in fact he had made no legal attachment.

Where a sheriff or constable having a writ of attachment, and, not being misled by any instructions from plaintiff or his attorney, represents to plaintiff that he has made a valid attachment, and thereby induces plaintiff to rely on it, and forego making any further attachment, he is estopped, in an action of trespass on the case, to show that in fact he made no legal attachment.[19]

§ 84. Extent of Liability

A sheriff or constable who voluntarily releases or negligently loses control of property levied on is liable only to the extent of the injury.

A sheriff or constable who voluntarily releases or negligently loses control of property levied on is liable only to the extent of the injury,[20] and if he releases the goods to the attaching creditor, who sells them for their full value, he is liable to the debtor only for the value of the interest in the goods which the latter claims as against his creditor.[21] A sheriff who voluntarily releases or negligently loses control of property levied on so that it is not available for the satisfaction of an execution is liable to the execution plaintiff for the amount of the debt[22] and costs[23] unless the property seized was not sufficient to satisfy the debt, in which case the measure of damages is the value of the property.[24] It has been variously stated that the value of the property should be determined as of the time when the levy was made,[25] as of the time when it should have been applied to the debt,[26] or as of the time when the property should have been sold by the sheriff.[27] If property in the custody of a sheriff or constable is destroyed through his negligence the owner is entitled to recover its value.[28]

Nominal damages, application of property to senior writs. Where a sheriff levies successive attachments of different creditors on property of a debtor, he will be liable only for nominal damages for failure to have it forthcoming to satisfy the execution of a junior attaching creditor, where he has applied it to satisfy the executions of senior attaching creditors previously obtained, complying with all the requirements of the statute in making the application.[29]

§ 85. —— Mitigation or Reduction of Damages

As a general rule a sheriff or constable is entitled to show in mitigation or reduction of damages any facts or circumstances which would tend to reduce the amount justly required to compensate for the actual loss sustained as the proximate result of the voluntary release or negligent loss of control of seized property.

As a general rule a sheriff or constable is entitled to show in mitigation or reduction of damages any facts or circumstances which would tend to reduce the amount justly required to compensate for the actual loss sustained as the proximate result of the voluntary release or negligent loss of control of seized property.[30] Thus, a sheriff or constable may reduce his liability for releasing or negligently losing control of goods held under process by showing that the property was subject to prior liens by reason of which the full amount of the execution could not have been realized by a sale.[31] So in an action against a sheriff for an unauthorized release of attached property, he may set up in mitigation of damages the facts that plaintiff's attachment was subsequent to many others, and that judgments have been rendered in the other actions more than sufficient to exhaust the attached property,[32] but he cannot mitigate damages by showing that the judgment debtor is solvent.[33] The payment and discharge of the execution during the pendency of an action against a sheriff for not properly keeping property attached goes merely in mitigation of damages and does not prevent a recovery of nominal damages.[34]

The fact that, after the neglect of a sheriff or constable to keep the property, the creditor could, by a new process or execution, obtain satisfaction of his debt, cannot be shown in mitigation of damages,[35] and the officer holding property under a writ of detinue, who fails to deliver it to defendant where plaintiff does not give a forthcoming bond, cannot mitigate damages by showing that defendant in the detinue suit did not own the property,[36] or that he had only a qualified interest therein,[37] or that it was subject to mortgage,[38] or that it was subsequently adjudged to belong to plaintiff in the writ.[39] In a suit by a creditor against a sheriff or constable for neglecting to keep personal property attached on mesne process so that it might be taken on execution, such officer is not entitled to have a reduction made from the full value of the property, in mitigation of damages, for the expenses which might have attended the keeping, had it been kept safely,[40] and a sheriff or constable who has permitted property attached by him to return to the hands of the debtor cannot be allowed a deduction from his liability for expense of keeping the property, where such expense was borne by the debtor.[41]

Use of property. Although the use of property seized is such as to make the officer a trespasser ab initio, and prima facie liable for the full value thereof, yet if the property is received back by its owner, or is legally disposed of on execution against him issued in the suit in which it was seized, the officer is not liable for the full value of the property, but only for such damages as were occasioned by the use.[42]

A sheriff may be held liable to a purchaser for failure to deliver the property sold, or for a failure to execute a deed for it; but he is not liable for loss of personal property after he has delivered it to the purchaser.

A sheriff may be held liable to a purchaser for failure to deliver the property sold,[43] but no liability arises because of failure to make manual delivery of goods not capable of such delivery.[44]

Refusal to execute deed. A sheriff is liable for a refusal to execute a deed for land sold by him.[45]

Loss of personal property after delivery to purchaser. An officer is not ordinarily liable for loss of personal property after he has delivered it to the purchaser at the sale.[46]

Trespass committed in delivery. Where a sheriff, by virtue of a sale on execution, proceeds to turn out of the possession of the premises sold by him persons other than defendant in execution and his heirs or tenants, he becomes a trespasser, and may be sued therefor at law[47]

Removal of goods from premises ordered sold. A sheriff who has an order of sale fair on its face, authorizing him to sell a certain house in foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, is not liable for entering such house and removing therefrom the goods of persons who are not parties to the suit, even though such persons are the owners of the house, and in possession of it.[48]

b. Conveyance or Delivery without Payment of Price

A sheriff or constable who conveys or delivers property sold on execution to the purchaser without payment of the purchase money is liable to the execution creditor for the amount of the debt, not exceeding the purchase price, and to the owner of the property or the person entitled thereto for any surplus of the price over the amount of the debt.

Where a sheriff or constable conveys or delivers property sold on execution to the purchaser without payment of the purchase money, he becomes liable to the execution creditor for the amount of the debt, not exceeding the purchase price,[49] and for any surplus of the price over the amount of the debt the sheriff is liable to the owner of the property or the person entitled thereto,[50] but, if the amount realized is less than the amount of the execution, the sheriff is not liable to the creditor.[51] So, if an officer sells on credit, without any agreement of the parties or order of the creditor, he is liable for a consequent loss.[52] Also, where the property is sold on mesne process, the officer is liable to the owner of the property for the full price, although the purchaser has not paid it.[53] The sheriff cannot excuse his failure to receive the purchase money on execution sale of land, by showing that the purchaser was the real owner of the property.[54] A sheriff has been held not liable because no actual cash passed to him from the purchaser at the sale, where he accepted in payment receipts for all judgments against the property after payment of costs.[55]

c. Failure to Enforce Payment of Bid

A sheriff may be held liable for the loss caused by his failure to enforce a bid made and accepted at a sale of property made by him.

A sheriff may be held liable for failing to enforce a bid made and accepted at a sale of property made by him, by reason of which the property is resold at a lower price and the difference lost to the owner or the creditor,[56] although there is authority to the contrary[57] In an action by the execution defendant for such default, the sheriff may show in defense that the price bid by the first purchaser was in consequence of the fraudulent misrepresentations of the execution defendant respecting his title.[58]

d. Liability for Cost of Advertising Sale

As a general rule, in the absence of any special contract or agreement to that effect, a sheriff is not personally liable to the publisher for the cost of advertisements of sales to be made by him in his official capacity.

The general rule is that, in the absence of any special contract or agreement to that effect, a sheriff is not personally liable to the publisher for the cost of advertisements of sales to be made by him in his official capacity,[59] although he procures the publication thereof;[60] but the publisher must look to the person for whose benefit the advertisement is made.[61] Some authorities, however, have held that the sheriff is liable for such expense in the absence of any agreement to the contrary.[62]

e. Wrongful Acts of Purchaser

A sheriff is not liable for the wrongful acts of the purchaser of property sold by him.

If the purchaser of property, which is wrongfully sold under execution, has caused any damage to the execution defendant in removing the property, he alone, and not the sheriff, is liable therefor.[63] Where a sale by a sheriff as substituted trustee is set aside for conspiracy between the purchaser and the beneficiary in the trust deed, the sheriff, having acted in good faith, is not liable to the owner of the property for damage due to the wrongful acts of the purchaser in evicting the owner.[64]

f. Liability as Warrantor of Title

A sheriff or constable selling property under process incurs no liability as a warrantor of title.

A sheriff or constable selling property under process incurs no liability as a warrantor of title,[65] but, if he knows of defects in the title or the existence of an adverse claim, he should make these facts known at the sale for the guidance of purchasers.[66]

g. Liability as Trespasser Ab Initio

A sheriff who has originally acted properly under legal process, pursuant to which property has come into his possession, is not liable as a trespasser ab initio for subsequent acts of mere nonfeasance connected with the sale thereof, but he is liable as a trespasser ab initio if he grossly abuses his authority by positive acts of misfeasance.

A sheriff who has originally acted with propriety under legal process, pursuant to which property has come into his possession, cannot be made liable as a trespasser ab initio for subsequent acts of mere nonfeasance connected with the sale thereof,[67] but, if he grossly abuses his authority by positive acts of misfeasance, he becomes a trespasser ab initio.[68] Previous demand on the officer for the property is not necessary in order to maintain an action against an officer who has become a trespasser ab initio by selling attached property without complying with statutory requirements.[69]

§ 87. Invalid or Irregular Sale

a. In general
b. Sale of property not belonging to defendant
c. Sale of common property under process against cotenant
d. Sale of exempt property
e. Sale of mortgaged or encumbered property
f. Sale of property on demised premises
g. Sale of property in custody of law
h. Sale without levy, order of court, appraisement, or notice
i. Improprieties in conduct of sale
j. Sale at inadequate price
k. Excessive sale

a. In General

A sheriff who sells property under process which is void on its face, or property which he has no authority to sell under his process, or who sells property after he has knowledge of satisfaction of the judgment or after he has received notice of an injunction restraining the sale, or an order staying the proceedings, may be liable for any damages resulting from such act.

A sheriff who sells property under process which is void on its face,[70] or property which he has no authority to sell under his process,[71] is liable for any damages resulting from such act unless the execution defendant is estopped to complain.[72] So, a sheriff who attaches property on mesne process and sells it thereon without authorization of court or the consent of the creditor and owner,[73] or otherwise than by the mode prescribed by statute,[74] becomes liable as a trespasser; and the liability of the officer for an illegal sale under attachment is not affected by the fact that he has subsequently attached the proceeds of the sale on another writ in favor of the same plaintiff and against the same defendant.[75] The fact that a purchaser at a sheriff's sale has notice of the circumstances under which the sale is made does not bar an action by him against the sheriff for breach of the implied covenant that the sheriff had authority to sell, which was recited in his deed.[76]

Second sale of property already sold. In an action against a sheriff for selling under execution the same property which he has previously sold on a different execution, the sheriff may show that the first sale was fraudulent.[77]

Sale after satisfaction of judgment or tender of amount due. A sheriff who sells property seized under execution after the judgment has been, to his knowledge, satisfied,[78] or after his refusal of a tender by the judgment debtor of the amount due,[79] is liable therefor to the execution defendant.

Sale after garnishment of debt. A sheriff incurs no liability by a sale of property under execution, although he is notified that the debt has been garnished in a suit by a third person against the creditor, where he is not a party to the garnishment proceeding.[80]

Sale after death of debtor. Where a sheriff levies an execution on property and sells it, after the death of defendant, for its full value, and returns the execution satisfied, the personal representatives of defendant cannot, in an action against the sheriff, recover the value of the property which may have been so appropriated in satisfaction of the debts of the decedent.[81] So, where administrators neglect to procure a stay of execution against the estate of their intestate, and his chattels are afterward sold on such execution, the estate being insolvent, they have no right of action against the officer who levied the execution.[82]

Sale after bankruptcy of debtor. It has been held that a debtor cannot, as against a sheriff's plea of justification under a writ of execution, set up a discharge in bankruptcy subsequent to the judgment, it being the duty of the debtor to have availed himself of such defense against the judgment by audita querela and supersedeas to the execution.[83]

Sale after injunction, stay, or supersedeas. A sheriff is liable where he sells property after receiving notice of an injunction restraining the sale,[84] or an order staying proceedings on the writ,[85] or a supersedeas of the writ.[86]

Sale pending appeal. Where a prior attachment was vacated and declared subordinate to a second attachment against the same defendant, but subsequently such vacation was set aside on appeal, but no stay of proceedings pending such appeal was obtained, and the sheriff, without notice of the pendency thereof, in good faith and in accordance with the decision setting aside the first attachment, sold the property and distributed the proceeds under the second attachment, he was not liable to plaintiff in the first attachment for the amount of his execution.[87]

Sale under writ subsequently set aside. Where a sheriff permits plaintiff in execution to purchase the goods levied on before the return day of the writ, and the writ is set aside by the court, he is liable to subsequent execution creditors.[88] Where a sheriff sells attached goods on mesne process, pursuant to statute, and, after the suit on which they were attached is dismissed, defendant in that suit brings an action against the officer to recover the proceeds of the goods, the officer may defend by showing that the goods were the property of a third person who has recovered or demanded satisfaction of him for seizing them.[89]

(2) Notice or demand; estoppel of owner or claimant

(1) In General

As a general rule, a sheriff or constable who sells property not belonging to defendant in the process under which he acts is liable to the true owner for the resulting damage. A sheriff selling property under a special execution directing him to seize and sell that identical property is not liable for the execution of the process, unless the writ is obviously invalid.

As a general rule, a sheriff or constable who sells property not belonging to defendant in the process under which he acts is liable to the true owner for the resulting damage,[90] although the sale was made without taking actual possession of the property,[91] and the officer making the sale did not remove it.[92] He cannot escape liability because he sold only "the right, title, and interest" of the debtor,[93] or on the ground that the property was purchased by the owner's bailee, and that the latter was bound to return it to the owner on demand,[94] or by reason of a consent to the sale, given by an unauthorized person,[95] but it has been held that, where a sheriff levies on the debtor's "right, title, and interest in a certain leasehold upon which is erected a certain stationary steam sawmill," and sells the property as the "leasehold interest . . . with the improvements," he is not liable to a third person claiming ownership of the sawmill by purchase thereof prior to the levy.[96]

The sheriff who levies an attachment and makes a sale thereunder is not protected from action by claimants of the property by the fact that he takes a bond from the attaching creditor, containing a provision, unauthorized by the statute under which it is taken, obligating such creditor to pay to any claimant of the property the damage he may sustain from the seizure or sale.[97] If the sheriff after selling under execution property not belonging to the debtor surrenders the property to the true owner and returns the purchase price to the purchaser, he thereby incurs no liability to the execution creditor.[98]

Liability to purchaser. If the true owner recovers the property from the purchaser, the sheriff is liable to the purchaser for the damage which he has sustained.[99]

Sale of property levied on by predecessor. Where a sheriff levies on the goods of a wife under an execution against her husband, and the sheriff's successor in office sells them in disregard of a notice that they belong to the wife, the sheriff who made the sale is liable to her in trespass.[1]

Sale of subtenant's crops for rent Where a statute makes crops raised on rented land liable for the rent, the mere fact that the sheriff, after levying on a sufficiency of the crop of a tenant to satisfy the rent, suffers him to retain and dispose of it does not render him liable to a subtenant for a subsequent seizure and sale of the crop raised by the subtenant on the rented premises.[2]

Property in possession of fraudulent grantee Where a sheriff levies an attachment in favor of existing creditors of the grantor, on goods claimed by the grantee under a conveyance which is fraudulent and void as to such creditors, his subsequent sale of the goods, without an order of court, does not render him liable to the grantee as a trespasser ab initio.[3]

Effect of trial of right of property. According to some authorities where the right of property is tried in the manner provided by statute, a finding that the property belongs to the debtor relieves the sheriff from liability for subsequently selling it under his process, even though it really belongs to another,[4] and the same rule has been applied where the jury on trial of right of property fail to agree;[5] but other authorities hold that, the proceeding being not judicial, a finding of the debtor's ownership affords the sheriff no protection if it is erroneous.[6] After an appeal by a claimant from a judgment rendered against him on a trial of the right of property, the officer selling the property does so at his peril of a reversal of such judgment.[7]

Process against specific property sold. A sheriff seizing and selling property under a special execution, directing him to seize and sell that identical property, is not liable for the execution of the process,[8] unless it appears from the writ itself that the court issuing it had no jurisdiction of the subject matter,[9] or unless he finds the property in the possession of one not in privity with the execution defendant.[10]

(2) Notice or Demand; Estoppel of Owner or Claimant

A demand is not necessary to entitle the owner of property sold under process against another to maintain an action against the officer for the wrong; but the failure of the real owner to give the sheriff notice of his claim may constitute an abandonment of his claim or estop him from suing the sheriff for selling the goods levied on.

A sale of property of one person under process against another makes the conversion complete and no demand is necessary to entitle the owner to maintain an action against the officer for the wrong.[11] On the other hand, it has been held that a person whose property is seized under a writ directed against another is estopped to sue the sheriff or constable for selling the goods levied on, where the officer acts in good faith and the true owner, having knowledge of the seizure and an opportunity to act, gives the officer no notice of his claim,[12] and remains silent beyond the period for commencing suit against the seizing creditor.[13] Notice given by one at the sheriff's sale that the goods belong to him, and that the purchaser will take no title, does not, in the absence of bad faith, estop him to sue the sheriff in trespass, and confine him to his remedy against the purchaser.[14] Under some statutes a claimant of property seized by a sheriff or constable is deemed to have abandoned his claim unless he takes action to vindicate and enforce the same within a specified time after it is asserted,[15] and in such case the officer incurs no liability by proceeding to sell the property.[16]

A person who notifies the officer that the property seized under an execution against a third person belongs to him, will not, by omitting to take legal measures to prevent the sale, lose his recourse against the officer,[17] and, where claimant has taken the proper steps under the statute to protect his rights until a trial thereof can be had, a sheriff who refuses to recognize such rights and sells in violation thereof is liable in damages.[18] Where the owner notifies the sheriff of his ownership and forbids a sale, this is tantamount to a demand for the property and renders the sheriff liable if he subsequently sells it.[19]

Confusion of goods. Where goods of a debtor and a third person have, without fraud or collusion, become mixed so that they cannot be distinguished, but after seizure the third person points out his goods to the officer, and demands a redelivery of them, and the officer, notwithstanding, sells all the goods, he will be liable;[20] but, where the goods are so intermingled that the sheriff is unable to distinguish them and the third person does not himself identify and point out his goods, the officer is justified in selling the whole as the property of the debtor.[21]

c. Sale of Common Property under Process against Cotenant

A sheriff who assumes to sell all of the property of cotenants under process against one of them is liable to the cotenant not named in the process for the resulting damage.

Although the sheriff may sell the interest of a cotenant in the common property under process against him, if he assumes to sell the entire property, his act is wrongful as against the cotenant not named in the process, and he is liable for the resulting damage,[22] although this rule has been held inapplicable where a sale on execution against one cotenant passes only his undivided interest.[23] Where a tenant in common of personalty assigns his share, and, after the assignment, the sheriff, under an execution against the assignor, sells the common property and delivers it to the other original tenant who is the purchaser at the sale, the sheriff is not liable to the assignee for conversion.[24]

d. Sale of Exempt Property

A sheriff or constable who sells exempt property after he has been notified of the exemption is liable to the owner for the resulting damage.

A sheriff or constable who sells exempt property after he has been notified of the exemption is liable to the owner for the resulting damage,[25] notwithstanding the failure of the justice who issued the writ to comply with directory provisions of the statute.[26] The sheriff is not relieved from liability because a third person at the time of the levy claimed the property under a mortgage and the debtor did not at the time deny such claim.[27] An officer cannot justify the sale of property selected as exempt on the ground that the debtor had other property,[28] although, where a debtor was in possession of two cows as the apparent owner, he could not, having made the question of ownership doubtful by his own act, recover in trespass against the sheriff who sold one of the cows which the debtor claimed was exempt.[29] An officer may be held liable where a claim of exemption is made and he sells the property without taking the steps required by statute to ascertain the extent of the exemption,[30] or he may be liable where he sells the property after the debtor withdraws his previous consent to the levy.[31]

In order to hold the sheriff liable it must be made to appear that the property was exempt at the time when it was levied on,[32] that the exemption was claimed by the debtor,[33] and that the exemption was available against the debt under which the sale was made.[34] Where the sheriff fails to inform the appraisers of property seized on execution of a mortgage lien thereon, set forth in the claim by defendant in execution that the property is exempt from seizure and sale, and the appraisement is made without any allowance therefor, the sheriff cannot interpose such appraisement as a defense in an action for selling the property when the amount of the lien would reduce defendant's interest to less than the amount exempt by law.[35]

Sale under specific lien. Where an officer sells property under a chattel mortgage covering both exempt and nonexempt property, and the proceeds of the nonexempt portion are sufficient to satisfy the debt, and the mortgagor demands that they be so applied, but the officer further proceeds to sell the exempt part, he is personally liable for its value.[36]

Effect of disclaimer. Where a debtor at the time of the appraisement of goods levied on, for the purpose of setting aside his exemption, disclaims title to a portion of the goods, he cannot afterward maintain an action of trespass against the officer for selling such goods.[37]

Purchase by debtor. A judgment debtor whose exempt property is sold under execution is not prejudiced in an action by him on the sheriff's indemnity bond, by his having bidden off the property in good faith and without collusion for a bank which had a mortgage thereon.[38]

e. Sale of Mortgaged or Encumbered Property

A sheriff or constable incurs no liability to a mortgagee of personal property by selling under process the mortgagor's interest therein, but he is liable to the mortgagee for conversion if, having notice of the mortgage, he assumes to make an absolute sale of the mortgaged property under process against the mortgagor.

A sheriff or constable incurs no liability to a mortgagee of personal property by selling under process the mortgagor's interest therein,[39] where the property is found in the possession of the mortgagor,[40] the mortgage is not due,[41] and the officer does not deliver possession of the property to the purchaser,[42] although some authorities have held that the sheriff is not relieved from liability by the fact that he announced that he sold "defendant's interest" only, and subsequently returned that he had levied on it and sold such interest.[43] It has also been held that an officer who has levied on the mortgagor's interest in goods in the latter's possession is not liable in trespass or trover to the mortgagee, even though he sells the goods in general terms, without recognizing the mortgagee's interest, and delivers them to the purchaser.[44] So, also, where a judgment is assigned as collateral security for an indebtedness in a sum smaller than the face of the judgment, the assignee cannot maintain an action for conversion against an officer because of a levy and sale of the judgment, subject to the assignment, under an execution against the judgment plaintiff.[45]

On the other hand, it is the general rule that, where property is covered by a mortgage of which the sheriff has notice, he is liable to the mortgagee for conversion if he assumes to make an absolute sale of the property under process against the mortgagor,[46] and consents to the removal thereof,[47] in the absence of any act by the mortgagee to estop him to claim under the mortgage.[48] So, the sheriff will be liable if he sells the property on execution against the mortgagor, when the mortgagee is in possession,[49] and, where by the terms of the mortgage the mortgagee is entitled to demand possession of and sell the property at any time and has demanded possession, the sheriff is liable to the mortgagee if he subsequently assumes to sell even the mortgagee's interest.[50] Where a mortgagee's agent had no power to sell the mortgaged property after foreclosure, a sheriff who made return in the name of, and executed a bill of sale to, one to whom the agent, after bidding in the property at the foreclosure sale, had sold it was held liable for damages resulting to the mortgagee.[51]

f. Sale of Property on Demised Premises

Under a statute which provides that no property on demised premises shall be liable to be taken under execution, unless the party at whose suit the execution is sued out shall pay the landlord the rent due, a sheriff or constable who, with notice that rent is due on demised premises, sells property thereon without paying the rent is liable to the landlord therefor.

Under a statute providing that no property on demised premises shall be liable to be taken under execution, unless the party at whose suit the execution is sued out shall pay the landlord the rent due, as considered in Executions §§ 128 b, 247 c, a sheriff or constable may be held liable to a landlord where he sells property on demised premises on which rent is due,[52] without paying the rent,[53] provided he had notice that rent was due,[54] and he cannot escape liability by showing that the levy under which he sold was invalid.[55] The liability of the officer extends to the amount of the entire proceeds of the sale when they are less than the rent.[56]

g. Sale of Property in Custody of Law

A sheriff who sells property held by another officer under prior executions for enough to satisfy the prior executions is liable to the other officer for that amount.

stable under prior executions, and sells it for enough to satisfy the prior executions, he is liable for that amount to the constable, without any promise to pay [57]

h. Sale without Levy, Order of Court, Appraisement, or Notice

A sheriff or constable is liable if he sells property without a levy thereon, or a court order therefor, or without compliance with statutory conditions precedent to the sale, such as appraisement of the property or proper notice of the sale.

A sheriff or constable who sells the goods of a debtor without a levy thereon is liable therefor to the owner.[58] A sheriff who attaches property on mesne process and sells it without an order for such sale becomes liable as a trespasser,[59] but such sale does not render him liable as a trespasser ab initio to a fraudulent grantee of the debtor.[60]

Sale without appraisement. A sheriff or constable who sells property distrained for rent without appraisement will be liable in trover for a wrongful conversion thereof in a jurisdiction where a statute requires that property distrained for rent must be appraised before its sale.[61]

Sale without proper notice. A sheriff or constable who omits to advertise or give notice of a sale of property as required by statute, or does not advertise or give notice of the sale in the manner and for the time required by statute, becomes a trespasser ab initio,[62] or is guilty of conversion;[63] and he is liable for any damage occasioned by such neglect of duty.[64] In such case no demand for the return of the property is necessary.[65]

i. Improprieties in Conduct of Sale

(1) In general
(2) Sale at improper time
(3) Sale at improper place

(1) In General

Where a sale by a sheriff fails because of his noncompliance with the law, he may be held liable to the purchaser for the damage which he has sustained by reason of such failure.

Where a sale by a sheriff fails because of his noncompliance with the law, he may be held liable to the purchaser for the damage which he has sustained by reason of such failure.[66] It is negligence for which the sheriff is liable to sell a large amount of miscellaneous merchandise on an advertised list which he knows to be defective, without ascertaining and making known to the bidders the extent of the discrepancy.[67] Also, where a sale of personal property on execution is void for failure to comply with a statute requiring the presence of the property at the sale, as considered in Executions § 207 c, the sheriff, having delivered the property to the purchaser, is liable for conversion [68] It has been held that an attaching officer who merely lodged a copy of the writ, with his return, in the sheriff's office, and did not take possession of the property from the debtor, and who received nothing for it on a subsequent sale, was not liable to the debtor, either in trespass or trover, where the statutory requirements with respect to attachment sales were not complied with [69]

The sale at one time on several executions of a large variety of goods in one lot at one price is not necessarily irregular or improper, so as to render the officer liable for a conversion thereof.[70] The sale of a property as a unit instead of in separate parcels does not render the sale invalid so as to render the sheriff liable where there is no showing that a larger sum could have been realized had the property been sold in parcels,[71] and, even though property should have been sold in parcels, a sale in bulk is merely irregular and not void, and the sheriff can only be held liable for it thereafter if he wrongfully fails to retake the property after the sale is set aside.[72] The mere fact that the sheriff, when about to sell property, stated, at a time not defined and under circumstances not disclosed, that if any one bid at his sale he would get the property is not sufficient to show that his conduct was tortious and render him liable.[73]

Purchase by officer. An action lies against a sheriff or constable if he purchases property sold by him at judicial sale,[74] but, as considered infra § 90, the amount paid by him on the goods may go in mitigation of damages.

Sale in improper order. Where the statute requires the principal's property to be exhausted before proceeding to sell that of the surety, the officer is liable to the surety for any damage resulting from a disregard of such direction.[75]

(2) Sale at Improper Time

A sheriff or constable selling property at an improper time is liable for the damage caused thereby.

Where the statute absolutely limits the time within which a sale must be made, a sheriff or constable selling after such time is liable to the owner of the property as a trespasser ab initio.[76] An officer may also be held liable for selling property levied on before the time when he was legally authorized to do so.[77] Where the statute absolutely forbids a sale before the prescribed time, the officer is a trespasser ab initio if he sells the property before that time,[78] but, if he is vested by statute with discretion to sell property without an order of court when the expense of keeping it is very great, he cannot be held liable as a trespasser ab initio because of a sale on that ground, unless he grossly abuses his discretion.[79]

(3) Sale at Improper Place

A sheriff or constable who sells property under process at an improper place is liable for the damage caused thereby.

Where a sheriff or constable advertises property seized under process for sale at a designated place and sells it at another and a different place, he becomes a trespasser ab initio,[80] and is liable to the owner of the property for the damage sustained,[81] but not to a fraudulent mortgagee.[82] The fact that the officer has paid over the proceeds of the sale does not relieve him from liability.[83] It has also been held that, where property is advertised for sale and is sold at a place other than that designated by statute, the officer will be liable in the absence of a sufficient legal excuse.[84] Where the statute vests the sheriff with some discretion in selecting the place of sale, a sale at a place not embraced in the terms of the statute does not constitute the sheriff a trespasser, but is at most an irregularity rendering him liable in an action on the case for any actual damages sustained by reason of such irregularity.[85]

j. Sale at Inadequate Price

A sheriff who fairly conducts a sale of property is not liable in damages merely because the price realized is inadequate, but he is liable if the property is sold for less than its fair value by reason of his misconduct amounting to fraud or gross negligence.

Where a sale of property is fairly conducted by the sheriff, he is not liable in damages merely because the price realized is inadequate,[86] but, where property is sold for less than its fair value by reason of the misconduct of the officer,[87] amounting to fraud or gross negligence,[88] he is liable, unless the owner of the property has waived his right of action.[89] Where a sheriff sells land for less than two thirds of its appraised value, in violation of the statute, but the judgment debtor, who is the only person injured, waives the invalidity of the sale, by suing the sheriff for damages sustained by reason of such irregular sale, the sheriff will not be allowed to plead his own wrong, or set forth his own void sale, to defeat the action.[90]

k. Excessive Sale

A sheriff who sells more property of the debtor than is necessary to satisfy the debt and costs is liable with respect to the excess.

A sheriff who sells more property of the debtor than is necessary to satisfy the debt and costs is liable with respect to the excess,[91] although he has not been guilty of actual corruption or intentional fraud.[92] Also, where a sheriff, under an order of sale in a partition suit authorizing him to sell half of a tract of land, advertises and sells the entire tract, a purchaser who has paid for the full tract without knowledge of the sheriff's want of authority to sell it may recover of the sheriff for any loss which he has sustained thereby.[93] An officer making an excessive sale does not render himself liable as a trespasser ab initio to one who holds an unrecorded mortgage on a portion of the property which was rightfully sold.[94]

§ 88. Failure to Sell

a. In general
b. Excuses for failure to sell

a. In General

A sheriff who improperly neglects or refuses to sell property levied on is liable to the execution plaintiff for the resultant damages.

A sheriff is liable in damages to the execution plaintiff, in some states under statutes so providing, where he improperly neglects or refuses to sell property levied on or subject to execution.[95] However, such failure has been held not to make the sheriff a trespasser ab initio,[96] although there is authority to the contrary.[97]

Failure to resell on default of purchaser. A sheriff who sells property and, on the failure of the purchaser to pay his bid, allows the return day of the writ to pass without putting the property up for resale is liable to another execution creditor who is injured by the neglect.[98]

What constitutes failure to sell. Where the successful bidder at a sheriff's sale repudiated the sale because of an omission in the advertisement, and the sheriff duly returned the order of sale, with a certificate of the facts thereon, and afterward another order of sale was issued, the fact that the property sold for a much smaller sum than at the first sale did not constitute a failure on the part of the sheriff to execute the first order, so as to subject him to an amercement provided for by statute.[99]

b. Excuses for Failure to Sell

(1) In general
(2) Property not belonging to defendant
(3) Property claimed as exempt
(4) Property subject to prior liens or claims
(5) Injunction against sale
(6) Impossibility of selling

(1) In General

A sheriff or constable may avoid liability for failure to sell property levied on or subject to execution by showing that he was justified in failing to enforce the execution or that no injury resulted to the judgment creditor by reason of his default.

A sheriff or constable may avoid liability for failure to sell property levied on or subject to execution by showing that he was justified in failing to enforce the execution or that no injury resulted to the judgment creditor by reason of his default.[1] Where the proceedings after the levy of a fieri facias are interrupted by the act of plaintiff in the writ, he cannot hold the sheriff liable for failure to sell.[2] It is no excuse for failure to sell that the execution defendants notified the sheriff of their intention to file a bill to enjoin the execution, and he thought the bill would be sanctioned;[3] that, on advice of counsel, he refrained from selling on the interposition of an affidavit of illegality, where he ought not to have received such affidavit;[4] that he had delivered the execution and goods to his successor in office;[5] or that the property would not sell for its appraised value as required by a statute enacted after the levy was made.[6]

Good faith of officer. It is no excuse for failure to sell that the officer acted honestly and in good faith,[7] and intended no disobedience to the precept of the court.[8] On the other hand, a sheriff has been held not liable where he acted in good faith under a statute, the proper construction of which was unsettled.[9]

Bankruptcy of debtor. It was held in an early case that, where property is levied on by a sheriff under an execution from a state court and defendant is adjudged a bankrupt, and no proceedings are taken in the bankruptcy court to compel the property levied on to be brought into that tribunal for distribution, the adjudication of bankruptcy and the issuing of the ordinary writ of protection will not excuse the sheriff for not proceeding to sell the property and raise the money.[10]

Several executions. Where property is seized under several writs, it has been held a good defense to a suit by the creditor whose writ was last levied, for failure to sell the property, that if a sale had been made the amount would have been absorbed in satisfying the prior writs,[11] although there is authority to the contrary.[12] Where a sheriff levies on defendant's property under two executions in favor of different plaintiffs, and the first execution is withdrawn by consent of the parties, but the sheriff neglects to proceed and sell under the second execution, he is liable to the second plaintiff for such neglect[13]

Property seized by predecessor. A sheriff cannot be held responsible for failure to sell property seized by his predecessor in office, without proof that the property so seized had come into his possession, or that he had bound himself in some way for it.[14]

Expiration of term before return day. The fact that the execution or order for the sale of property was returnable after the sheriff's term of office expired is not a good defense to the sheriff's liability for his failure or refusal to sell the property, where he could have sold it.[15]

(2) Property Not Belonging to Defendant

A sheriff may excuse himself from liability for failure to sell property levied on by showing that it did not belong to the execution defendant.

Where it is sought to hold a sheriff liable for failure to sell property on which he has made a levy under execution, he may exculpate himself by showing that the property was not subject to the execution but belonged to a third person,[16] and the failure of the real owner to come in and interplead under a rule taken by the sheriff does not preclude the latter from setting up the owner's title as a defense for not selling[17] However, the officer will be liable to the creditor if he fails to prove that the property did not belong to the debtor, where he relies thereon as an excuse for his failure to sell.[18] The mere interposition by a third person of a claim to the property which is not duly authenticated does not excuse the officer's failure to sell,[19] even though such officer acted in good faith;[20] and a proper claim of title by a third person will not excuse the officer's failure to sell, where a jury impaneled to try the right of property have found it subject to the process.[21]

held liable for such refusal, where he did not show that he would have been required to take the property of one person to pay the debt of another, or to do any unlawful act;[22] but where, previous to the time appointed for an execution sale, the property levied on was replevied on a writ in favor of a third person, served on the sheriff by one of his deputies, this was held a sufficient excuse to the sheriff for not selling it under execution.[23] The verdict of a jury, summoned by the sheriff to find whether goods belong to defendant in execution, is not conclusive on plaintiff in the execution so as to bar his action against the sheriff for failure to sell.[24]

(3) Property Claimed as Exempt

A sheriff is not liable for failing to sell property which the debtor claims as exempt where the creditor fails to contest the claim or refuses to indemnify the sheriff.

A sheriff is not liable for failing to sell property which the debtor claims as exempt,[25] where the creditor fails to contest the claim[26] or the contest remains undetermined,[27] or where the creditor refuses to indemnify him.[28]

(4) Property Subject to Prior Liens or Claims

A sheriff is not liable for a failure to sell property which is encumbered by prior liens or claims to an amount greatly exceeding its value.

Where property seized on execution is encumbered to an amount greatly exceeding its value, the sheriff is not liable for failure to sell it.[29] It has been held that, where a third party claim to property levied on showed that claimant was a mortgagee or pledgee of the property in possession after maturity of the debt, the sheriff was not liable for failure to release the interest of the claimant, and sell the equity of redemption which was in the execution debtor,[30] but, where a sheriff has levied on a crop in the field, but neglected to sell it, and is ruled by the execution plaintiff for failure to make the money, it is not a sufficient answer that after the levy the landlord of the owner of the crop carried the crop away in satisfaction of a lien due him superior to that of plaintiff.[31]

Conditional sale. A sheriff has been held not liable for his refusal to sell property levied on, where the judgment creditor failed to pay a balance owing thereon to a conditional seller of the property or his assignee.[32]

(5) Injunction against Sale

A sheriff is not liable for not selling property where the sale of the property has been enjoined.

A sheriff is not liable for not selling property where the sale of the property has been enjoined,[33] and this is true, even though the injunction has been dissolved on condition that plaintiff give security to refund the proceeds, where such security is not given.[34] However, it has been held that, where the sheriff is chargeable with negligence in not selling property levied on before the time when an injunction against the collection of the execution was granted, such injunction affords him no protection.[35]

(6) Impossibility of Selling

A sheriff is not liable for not selling property which it is impossible to sell.

Where the property has been properly offered for sale but remains unsold for want of buyers, the sheriff is not liable,[36] and a failure to make a sale may also be excused where the property is so obviously valueless that an attempt to sell it would be an idle ceremony.[37] The sheriff is not liable for neglect or refusal to make a sale of property levied on under execution, where it appears by his return that he had not time to sell on the day appointed by law for making sales, because other sales required by law to be made on that day consumed the whole time within which sales might lawfully be made.[38] So, also, it has been held to be a sufficient excuse for a sheriff for not selling property, advertised for sale on execution during a certain term of court, that the court adjourned at an un-

§ 89. Delay in Selling

A sheriff who improperly delays making a sale of property seized under process is liable for the damages resulting therefrom, but a sheriff is not liable for deferring the sale of property claimed as exempt until such claim can be passed on.

A sheriff who improperly delays making a sale of property which he has seized under process and should sell is liable to plaintiff in the process for the damage resulting from the delay,[40] and a mere postponement of the sale, if improper, renders the sheriff liable to plaintiff for the damage resulting therefrom;[41] but, unless the sheriff has grossly abused his authority, a delay in selling does not render him liable as a trespasser ab initio.[42]

Delay at instance of creditor. A sheriff is not liable to defendant in execution for damages resulting from the postponement of a resale of land, where he acted at the instance of the judgment creditor.[43]

Delay pending proceedings to open judgment. Where a rule to show cause why a judgment should not be opened was entered, and the sheriff delayed an execution sale under the judgment, although no order staying the proceedings was entered, he was liable for the loss occasioned by the property being sold under a subsequent execution.[44]

Property claimed as exempt. Where property levied on is claimed as exempt, the sheriff is not liable for deferring a sale until such claim can be passed on,[45] unless there is collusion between him and the debtor to prevent any sale.[46]

§ 90. Extent of Liability

a. In general
b. Sale without proper notice
c. Improprieties in conduct of sale
d. Failure to sell or deliver possession after sale

a. In General

Where a sale of property legally seized is wrongful, the value of the property at the time of the sale fixes the measure of damages.

As a general rule a sheriff is liable for the value of property wrongfully seized and not restored to the owner, or, if the owner regains the property, for the expense of doing so, as considered supra § 74, but, if the property was legally seized and only the sale was wrongful, the value of the property at the time of the sale, and not at the time of the seizure, fixes the measure of damages.[47] Where by reason of a sheriff's misconduct goods taken under execution by him are sold for less than their fair value, he is responsible for the difference between the fair value and the amount realized by the sale.[48] Where plaintiff, the grantee of an equity of redemption, for the purpose of strengthening his title, caused the equity to be sold on an execution which he held against his grantor, and bid it off himself for the amount of the execution, and took a deed of it from the sheriff, paying the latter no money except his expenses, and in consequence of a neglect of the sheriff the sale proved ineffectual, but plaintiff's title was valid independent of the sale, the measure of plaintiff's damages, in an action on the case against the sheriff for his default, was held not the sum bid by plaintiff at the sale, but the amount of the expenses actually paid by him, with interest from the time of payment.[49] So, where a sheriff's sale of land is declared a nullity because of his failure to seize the land, he may be held liable to the purchaser for all expenses incurred in consequence of his purchase.[50]

Nominal damages. A sale of the mortgagor's interest in personal property, even though possession is delivered to the purchaser without requiring the satisfaction of the mortgage, it being due and payable, subjects the officer only to nominal damages, where the property is still within the county, at a place near the residence of the mortgagee, and the security has not been in any way injured.[51] Where, in an action against a sheriff for selling property exempt from execution, it appears that plaintiff fraudulently concealed property to more than the value of his exemptions, he is entitled to only nominal damages.[52]

Mitigation of damages. Where a sheriff sells goods on execution unlawfully, he cannot set up, in mitigation of damages, a subsequent sale on another valid execution,[53] but in an action against a sheriff for selling exempt property he may show, in reduction of damages, that plaintiff owned only a part interest in the property.[54] If an officer wrongfully becomes the purchaser at his own sale, the amount paid by him may go in mitigation of damages.[55]

b. Sale without Proper Notice

The liability of a sheriff or constable for selling property without giving proper notice is the difference between the price it sold for and the price it would have sold for if proper notice had been given, or, in some instances, the value of the property sold.

In an action against an officer for selling property without giving proper notice, the measure of damages, it has been held, is not the value of the property, but the difference between the price it sold for and the price it would have sold for if proper notice had been given.[56] On the other hand, it has been held that the officer is liable to the original owner for the value of the property sold,[57] or that the measure of damages, in the absence of special circumstances, is the value of the property at the time and place of its conversion with interest thereon.[58] The owner, however, is not entitled to demand more from the sheriff than the sheriff received for the property at the sale, where the acquiescence of the owner in the sale caused title to the property sold to pass to the purchaser, even though the sale was invalid because made without legal notice.[59] Where the sheriff sells property on execution without serving on the owner a written notice as required by statute, it is error to limit the owner to nominal damages only, unless he proves that the property sold for less than it would have sold for if the notice had been given.[60]

Where the sheriff sells without lawful notice, he is not entitled to the protection of the writ under which he acted and the writ cannot be used in diminution of damages.[61] This rule, however, has been held to have reference to the damage growing out of that which the sheriff himself did on his own direction to make the sale illegal and with respect to which he departed from his duties under the warrant, and not to apply to acts which the sheriff did within, and in strict pursuance of, the command of the warrant;[62] and, hence, it has been held that he is entitled to a credit for amounts paid out in accordance with the direction of the warrant,[63] but that he is not entitled to a credit for the costs of the sale.[64] However, it has been held that the officer cannot show in mitigation of damages that he paid the execution plaintiff out of the proceeds of the sale.[65]

c. Improprieties in Conduct of Sale

A sheriff or constable is liable for improprieties in the conduct of a sale only to the extent of the loss or damage resulting as a natural and legal consequence of the irregularities and improprieties of which complaint is made.

In order to entitle a party to recover damages for irregularities in the conduct of an execution sale, he must show some loss or damage resulting to himself as a natural and legal consequence of the irregularities and improprieties complained of,[66] and the execution defendant cannot fix the measure of his own damages by his voluntary act in paying money to recover back from the execution purchaser the property alleged to have been irregularly sold.[67] However, where, in an action of trespass against an officer, it appeared that the officer had advertised to sell at a certain place goods of plaintiff taken on an execution against him, but had actually sold them at a different place, without the consent of plaintiff and without having adjourned the sale from the place advertised, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to recover the full value of the goods, although the officer had paid over the proceeds of the sale to the execution creditor.[68] A sheriff who sold property belonging to a person other than the execution defendant has been held liable to the true owner of the property for attorney's fees and costs incurred in a suit to avoid the sale and quiet title in himself.[69]

d. Failure to Sell or Deliver Possession after Sale

The measure of a sheriff's liability for not selling property levied on is the actual injury sustained by the execution plaintiff, which ordinarily will be the value of the property at the time when it should have been sold up to the amount of the writ, or such proportion of the value as would have been applicable on the plaintiff's writ, if the property is finally lost to plaintiff and satisfaction cannot otherwise be had.

The measure of the sheriff's liability for not selling property levied on is the actual injury sustained by the execution plaintiff,[70] which will ordinarily be the value of the property[71] at the time when it should have been sold[72] up to the amount of the writ,[73] or such proportion of the value as would have been applicable on plaintiff's writ,[74] if the property is finally lost to plaintiff and satisfaction cannot otherwise be had.[75] The sheriff may show in mitigation of damages that the property was encumbered by a lien sufficient to absorb it,[76] or that other executions would have exhausted it or shared in the proceeds.[77] Where part of the property levied on did not belong to the execution defendant, and the value of the balance was less than the amount of the execution, the sheriff cannot be held liable for the full amount of the execution.[78]

Failure to put purchaser in possession. A sheriff who refuses to execute an order requiring him to put a purchaser at foreclosure sale in possession of the land sold is liable to the purchaser for the loss of rent due to such failure during the time possession was withheld from him.[79]

Settlements

(1) Purported settlements made with fiscal court of sheriff's county revenue account including school fund which were nothing more than a list of amounts collected by sheriff as taxes and what he had paid out, and did not include any sum retained by himself as commissions, and which were not recorded in county court, were held not to constitute settlements made or recorded according to law.—Shipp v. Bradley, 275 S.W. 1, 210 Ky. 51.

(2) A report made and recorded by commissioners appointed by the fiscal court to make a settlement with the sheriff, which was made in the absence of the sheriff, and after he had absconded, cannot be treated as a settlement binding on the sheriff and his sureties.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Logan County, 84 S.W. 341, 119 Ky. 428.

of parties to leave in the hands of the sheriff a fund of which he is the legal custodian does not release him from responsibility for that fund.[81] Where an officer executing a writ obtains more money than is necessary to satisfy it, he is liable to defendant for the surplus.[82] In order to render a sheriff liable with respect to money received by him, it must be shown that he has violated some duty or obligation owing to the person seeking to recover.[83]

Liability to state for money received as bail. A sheriff who had in his charge a prisoner arrested by him on a warrant on which bail was indorsed has been held liable to the state for money received by him on deposit from such prisoner in lieu of bail, even though there was no statute permitting the sheriff to receive such deposit.[84]

Money sent by mail. Where a sheriff, without any directions to that effect, sends money through the mail, he does so at his own risk, and if the money is lost he is liable therefor to the person to whom he should have paid it,[85] but it is otherwise if he has been authorized by such party to remit by mail.[86]

Agreement as to application of money. Where a sheriff receives money from a judgment debtor, and agrees with him to apply it on the execution, provided such execution is just and legal, otherwise to return it, he is not bound to do more than to allow to such debtor the full time which the execution has to run to determine the legality of the execution, and where, at the expiration of that time, no proceedings to attack the execution have been instituted, he incurs no liability to the debtor by applying the money on the execution.[87]

b. Medium of Payment

A sheriff or constable who receives anything other than cash in discharge of an execution or in payment for property sold by him is liable for the amount he should have received in cash unless his action in the matter was authorized by the execution plaintiff.

A sheriff or constable who receives anything other than cash in discharge of an execution or in payment for property sold by him makes the debt his own and must respond to the execution plaintiff's demand in cash[88] unless his action in the matter was authorized by the execution plaintiff;[89] and if there are several executions the officer has no right to make an arrangement with some of the execution creditors to receive from them something other than cash for such property as they may buy unless the other execution creditors assent to the arrangement.[90] It has also been held that where a sheriff, selling goods on attachment, took a note with an indorser, making due inquiry as to the solvency of the indorser at the time of the sale, he was not liable, on the note being protested for nonpayment, although it appeared that each indorser was insolvent when the sale was made, but that such fact was not generally known in the commercial community.[91] The sheriff's return that he has made the money estops him to deny that he received cash.[92]

Acceptance of depreciated currency. A sheriff is liable to the execution plaintiff, where he receives depreciated currency in satisfaction of the execution, without plaintiff's consent.[93]

c. Liability for Deferred Payments on Credit Sale

A sheriff or constable who extends credit to a buyer at a sale under process, the terms of which are to be for cash, must respond in cash for the amount of the sale to the party who caused the process to issue.

A sheriff or constable who extends credit to a buyer at a sale under process, the terms of which are to be for cash, does so on his own responsibility and he must respond in cash for the amount of the sale to the party who caused the process to issue.[94] Where a sheriff, under proceedings in partition, has sold the land for a certain sum in hand, taking judgment notes for the balance as he was authorized to do, his return of sale renders him liable to pay the money into court, or to the several persons interested, as soon as their shares are ascertained, or to a call to bring the judgment notes into court, in order that the parties may have them properly disposed of,[95] and in case the money represented by the judgment notes is lost his liability therefor depends on whether or not he was guilty of negligence.[96]

d. Liability for Money Lent Out or Left with Third Person

A sheriff or constable is liable for money he lends out or leaves with a third person. It has been held that a sheriff may be liable for a loss resulting from the failure of a bank in which he has deposited the funds, but there is other authority which holds that he is not so liable in the absence of negligence or bad faith.

A sheriff who lends out money in his hands is responsible therefor;[97] and an order of court directing a sheriff to lend money in his hands on certain terms and on certain security will not protect him from liability to account for such money where he does not, in making a loan, exact the terms and security prescribed.[98]

A sheriff who, in execution of a writ of attachment, leaves a sum of money in the hands of a third person, and takes his receipt for it, constitutes him keeper, and the legal possession is in the sheriff, who is accountable to defendant on the dissolution of the attachment in the same manner as though the money had been actually taken into the sheriff's own possession.[99]

Loss by failure of bank. A sheriff who deposits in a bank money collected on process or otherwise in his custody is liable for loss resulting from the failure of the bank,[1] where the bank is not a lawful depositary for funds in the possession or custody of the sheriff.[2] On the other hand, it has been held that the liability of a sheriff for money in his hands is only that of a bailee for hire,[3] and that he is not liable for such loss unless he was negligent or acted in bad faith.[4]

e. Payment into Court

A sheriff or constable may end his responsibility for money collected on process by paying it into court in a case where payment into court is proper.

A sheriff or constable may end his responsibility for money collected on process by paying it into court in a case where payment into court is proper;[5] if the officer pays directly to the execution plaintiff in a case where the writ requires payment of the money into court he acts on his own responsibility.[6] Where an execution commands the sheriff to have the money ready for plaintiff on the return-day, he cannot discharge himself from liability to plaintiff by paying the clerk of the court and taking his receipt.[7] After the commencement of an action against him, a sheriff's payment to the clerk of the court of money collected on process is no defense to the action,[8] at least where the payment has not been accepted by the execution plaintiff.[9]

Order of court. The compliance, by a sheriff, with an order of court, directing him to pay into court the money realized from a distress for rent, relieves him from liability under a statute requiring him to pay over such money to the landlord or the agent.[10] So, where adverse claims are made on the money in the sheriff's hands, he may apply for leave to pay it into court, and thus be protected.[11]

f. Payment to Agent or Attorney

A sheriff or constable is relieved from liability for money in his possession by payment of it to the authorized agent or attorney of the person entitled to it.

Payment to the attorney of record of a party in whose favor a judgment has been rendered will relieve the sheriff or constable from liability[12] if he has no knowledge that the attorney's authority has been revoked;[13] but the sheriff is liable to the judgment creditor if he pays money to the latter's attorney when he is chargeable with knowledge or notice that such attorney's authority has been revoked[14] or after notice from plaintiff not to pay the money to the attorney.[15] A sheriff's liability for moneys received by him at a partition sale is not discharged by paying the money to the attorney who procured the sale, but who was not specially authorized to receive the proceeds, either by the parties entitled thereto or by order of court.[16] Where a statute requires that the appointment of an agent shall be indorsed on an execution when plaintiff does not reside in the county to which it goes, or shall be made in writing, the sheriff may refuse to pay until such evidence is furnished him,[17] but he waives such evidence where he either pays any part of the money or in any other manner recognizes the agency.[18]

g. Payment to Wrong Person

A sheriff who has collected money under process is liable if he pays it out to a person to whom he was not authorized to pay it.

A sheriff who has collected money under process is liable to plaintiff in such process if he pays out such money to another person to whom he was not authorized to pay it;[19] but the sheriff cannot be held liable for paying over money realized on an execution to the execution creditor unless he is affected with notice that another person is entitled thereto[20]

Effect of assignment of judgment. Where, after notice of the assignment of a judgment, the sheriff voluntarily appropriates the money received from the debtor to the claims of other parties who have executions in his hands against the judgment plaintiff, he is liable to account therefor to the assignee.[21] However, the assignee of a judgment cannot hold liable a sheriff who collects the money on execution and pays it over to the judgment creditor, although the assignee had given the sheriff notice of the assignment and demanded payment before it was paid to the assignee, where the assignment was not indorsed on the execution, and the judgment creditor insisted that he was entitled to the money.[22]

h. Repayment of Money to Defendant on Supersedeas of Writ

A sheriff to whom an execution defendant has paid the amount of the execution is liable for the return of the money on the execution being superseded.

A sheriff to whom an execution defendant has paid the amount of the execution in order to secure the release of property levied on is liable for the return of the money on the execution being superseded,[23] and he incurs no liability to the execution plaintiff by returning such money to defendant.[24]

i. Interest or Penalty

A sheriff who places money in his official custody so that it produces interest is liable therefor to the person entitled to the money; and he is chargeable with interest on money withheld by him after it becomes his duty to pay over or distribute it and on money which he has paid to the wrong person.

Where the sheriff so places money in his official custody that it produces interest, such interest should be treated as an accretion to the money, and belongs to the party entitled to the money,[25] and if the sheriff be authorized to sell on credit he is liable for the interest received by him on deferred payments.[26] However, where the officer, on his own responsibility, sells property on credit, and applies the full amount for which the property sold to the satisfaction of executions in his hands, he cannot be held liable to the creditor on account of interest which he receives on the amounts for which he extended credit.[27]

A sheriff is properly charged with interest on money withheld by him after it became his duty to pay it over or distribute it,[28] or on money which he has paid to the wrong person,[29] or with a penalty prescribed by statute for such a default.[30] He is not liable, however, for interest on the amount found to be due in addition to a statutory penalty prescribed for his default.[31] In an action against a sheriff for the defalcation of his deputy in not paying over to the county money collected by the deputy on a tax levy, the sheriff has been held not liable for interest accruing before the date of the judgment.[32] Where an agreement was made between two contending claimants for money in the sheriff's hands that the sheriff should deposit the amount in bank until the questions were decided, and the sheriff deposited it, but took it out again soon after, he was held liable for interest from the time the money was thus taken out of the bank.[33]

A statute relating to the liability of depositaries for interest has been held to have no reference to the duties of sheriffs and hence not to limit the liability of sheriffs for interest on the proceeds of sales made by them.[34]

j. Necessity of Demand

As a general rule a demand is a necessary prerequisite to an action against a sheriff or constable for failure to pay over money collected by him.

While some authorities have held that a demand is not necessary in order to render a sheriff liable for failure to pay over money collected by him,[35] the general rule is that a demand is a necessary prerequisite to an action against the officer for such failure,[36] but it has been held that the rule does not apply where the sheriff asserts a right to retain the money in opposition to plaintiff's claim[37] or where the money retained is public money collected for taxes due,[38] and in some jurisdictions the statutes relating to actions against sheriffs or constables for failure to pay over money collected on execution have been construed as requiring a demand before suit only where the creditor resides in a county other than that in which the money is collected.[39] So, where an officer, without authority, receives money from defendant in a writ, and agrees to pay it over to the creditor, but fails to do so, defendant, after being again sued and paying the money to the creditor, may, without previous demand, recover the money paid to the officer.[40] It has also been held that, where an officer has sold property levied on under execution for more than sufficient to satisfy the debt and costs, no demand is necessary to entitle the execution debtor to sue him for the surplus.[41] Where demand is necessary, an action of debt on a sheriff's official bond for money collected, and a nonsuit therein, is a sufficient demand to enable plaintiff to sustain an action on the case for the same cause of action.[42]

Money collected by deputy. Where money has been collected by a deputy, a demand on either the deputy[43] or the sheriff, where the deputy has gone out of office and left the state,[44] is sufficient to sustain an action against the sheriff.

Liability for interest dependent on demand. A sheriff cannot be charged with interest on money collected by him until a demand has been made on him for such money.[45]

k. Necessity for Order of Court as to Payment

An order of court requiring a sheriff or constable to pay over money in his possession is necessary in order to make him liable for a failure so to do, where there is a contest between claimants as to the right to the money or where he is required by law to retain it until the court has made an order for its disposition.

Where a contest arises between creditors as to the priorities of their respective liens on a fund collected by the sheriff under attachment or execution, the officer is not liable for failure to pay over such fund until he has been ordered to do so by the court, and has failed to comply with such order.[46] So, where the sheriff is required by law to retain the proceeds arising from a sale of perishable property held under attachment, made by order of the court during the pendency of the action, subject to the order of the court after the final judgment in the action, a sheriff cannot be sued for the proceeds of such property until the court has made an order for the disposition thereof.[47]

Money due from outgoing sheriff on final settlement. An action for balances found due from an outgoing sheriff in his final settlement cannot be maintained until he has been served with an order directing him to turn over such balances to his successor.[48]

1. Effect of Reversal of Judgment

A sheriff who has collected the amount of an execution and paid the money over to, or on the order of, the plaintiff is not liable for such amount in the event the judgment is reversed.

An officer who has collected the amount of an execution and paid the money over to, or on the order of, plaintiff is not, in case the judgment is reversed on appeal, liable for such amount to defendant[49] or to a garnishee from whom the money was collected.[50] Where one member of a firm confessed a judgment against himself and his copartner, and execution was issued thereon, and the partners paid the amount to the sheriff after a levy on partnership property, and subsequently the judgment was reversed as to the partner who was not a party to it, plaintiff in execution was held entitled to recover of the sheriff the amount received by him on the execution.[51]

Notice of appeal. A sheriff who has been given notice that an appeal will be taken from a court order directing him to pay money in his possession to a specified person has been held liable if he pays it as directed before the appeal has been disposed of either by prosecution or abandonment.[52]

§ 92. Default or Delay in Collecting

A sheriff or constable is liable for money which, through his negligence, he fails to collect.

A sheriff or constable who negligently fails to collect money which he might have collected is liable therefor,[53] but under some statutes a demand within a certain time is essential to fix such liability.[54] An officer who undertakes to collect money but fails to take any steps for that purpose for an unreasonable time is liable for such negligence.[55] Where property levied on under an execution is replevied and thereafter judgment in the replevin proceeding is in favor of the sheriff, it is the duty of the sheriff to institute an action on the replevin bond where the property replevied on is not returned to him, and where he fails to do so he is liable for the amount of the debt for which the execution was levied.[56]

A sheriff has been held not liable for the amount of a bid above the judgment, where it was the result of a mistake made in the computation of interest and no part of such amount was ever paid to the sheriff.[57] In a proceeding against a sheriff for his failure to collect out of partnership assets or property the money due on a judgment against a partner recovered by an individual creditor, it is competent for the sheriff to prove the insolvency of the partnership.[58]

§ 93. Distribution of Proceeds of Sale

A sheriff or constable is liable for his failure to distribute properly the proceeds of sales made by him.

A sheriff or constable in distributing or paying over the proceeds of sales made by him must at his peril see that each person entitled to share in such proceeds receives the amount to which he is entitled, failing in which he is liable to the person injured by his default,[59] although his action may have been based on the belief that the writ under which the party whom he failed to pay claims was invalid.[60] It is a clear breach of duty for which a sheriff is liable to suffer the attorney for plaintiff to take into his hands the proceeds of a sale and to deal with, and dispose of, them at his pleasure, and at a time most suitable to his convenience,[61] at least in case of partition or other sale where several persons are entitled to share in the pro-

Surplus after payment of lien.
A judgment creditor purchasing at execution sale subject to existing lien could recover judgment against constable for alleged conversion of proceeds remaining after payment of the prior lien and expenses of sale, notwithstanding the judgment creditor had not caused levy to be made on the surplus remaining in the constable's hands.—Siccardi v. Caruso, 198 A. 370, 120 N.J.Law 111.

ceeds.[62] However, where, of several attachments levied on property, some are prior to and some subsequent to a mortgage covering only a part of the property, and executions in all the attachment cases are delivered to the sheriff without special directions, he is not bound so to sell the property attached and so apply the proceeds as to satisfy all the executions, if he can, without regard to the right of the mortgagee, and if the method adopted by him is legal he incurs no liability to execution creditors who remain unpaid, although he might by proceeding in a different manner have secured payment for them to the exclusion of the mortgagee.[63]

Proceeds on foreclosure of mortgage on homestead Where a debtor's homestead was sold by a sheriff under mortgage foreclosure, the sheriff was not liable for failure to apply an excess arising on the sale on an execution in his hands against the mortgagor, and for delivering such excess to the mortgagor,[64] unless the sheriff knew when he turned over the money to the mortgagor that he did not intend it for reinvestment in another homestead.[65]

Proceeds of sale of property not belonging to debtor. A sheriff who, having received an indemnity bond, sells property on execution is liable to the execution creditor for the proceeds, although the execution debtor does not own the property.[66]

Distribution prior to return day A sheriff who distributes the proceeds of an execution sale prior to the return day of the writ does so at his own risk and peril.[67] Thus a sheriff who makes distribution prior to the return day of the writ is liable therefor, if at that time he knew the execution debtor was insolvent and if an involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed against the execution debtor and a restraining order served on the sheriff prior to the return day of the writ and at a time when payment of the check by which distribution was made could have been stopped;[68] but a sheriff's distribution of the proceeds of a sale under process prior to the return day of the writ is lawful and he is not liable to the debtor's trustee in bankruptcy for the amount thereof, at least on summary proceeding, where, at the time the distribution of the proceeds was accomplished, there was no other execution in the sheriff's hands, no bankruptcy petition had been filed against the execution debtor, and there was no fact or circumstance to warn the sheriff of a conflicting claim to the money,[69] and no liability arises against the sheriff even though the debtor is adjudicated a bankrupt on the return date of the writ.[70]

§ 94. —— Relief from Liability

A sheriff or constable who acts in good faith is not liable for paying the proceeds of a sale to a claimant who was apparently, although not really, entitled thereto, or for failing to pay a claimant of whose prior claim he did not have proper and sufficient notice.

Where the sheriff or constable acts in good faith, he is not liable for paying the proceeds of a sale to a claimant who was apparently, although not really, entitled thereto,[71] or for failing to pay a claimant of whose prior claim he had no notice and was not chargeable with notice,[72] unless such claimant has been prejudiced by the officer's distributing the proceeds before the proper time;[73] but if the officer had notice of the claim he will be liable.[74] Where the property sold was not subject to a certain debt, the creditor cannot hold the sheriff liable for not applying the proceeds thereto.[75] A person cannot hold the sheriff liable for not paying over to him a part of the proceeds which he was not entitled to receive[76] or for failure to apply the proceeds of a sale to his debt where the debt has since been satisfied.[77]

57 C J. p 875 note 11.

A sheriff who applies the proceeds of property seized to the judgment of a junior attaching creditor may avoid liability to the senior attaching creditor by showing that his judgment was fraudulently obtained,[78] but a sheriff who is sued for his failure to apply on an execution the proceeds of attached property cannot defend on the ground that the judgment was erroneous if the judgment debtor has given a release of errors therein.[79] It has been held that, where a lien creditor purchases land at execution sale, for a price greater than the amount of the lien, the reading of the sheriff's return in open court, and acknowledgment of his deed, without objection, does not relieve him from liability for wrongful distribution of the proceeds of sale over and above the amount of the lien.[80] However, under a statute authorizing a sheriff to distribute the proceeds of a sale of real estate under process in accordance with a schedule of distribution attached to his return and read in open court on a day fixed by the court where such schedule of distribution is not questioned or disputed within a reasonable time as fixed by the court, a sheriff who makes such a distribution is not liable to a claimant who did not previously record his lien or give notice of his claim at the sale or before distribution of the proceeds.[81]

Refusal of proper offer of payment. Where an officer has in his hands the proceeds of several executions, but not enough to satisfy them, and one of the creditors, entitled only to a small part, demands the whole or none, and refuses the officer's offer of more than his proportion, such creditor cannot recover,[82] and the officer is not bound to show that he had the money with him when he made the offer.[83]

Direction of party. Where a person entitled to receive part of such proceeds directs the sheriff to pay the money to another person who is not entitled to receive it, he cannot hold the sheriff liable for so doing.[84]

Necessity of injury to complainant. A sheriff who, after satisfying the creditor under whose process property is sold, applies the surplus to subsequent general mortgages binding on the debtor thereby incurs no liability to the debtor, since the latter is not thereby prejudiced.[85]

§ 95. Failure or Refusal to Pay Over Money

A sheriff or constable is liable for money in his possession in his official capacity which he refuses or fails to pay over to the person or persons entitled to it

A sheriff or constable who has made the money on a writ placed in his hands, or is otherwise in possession of money in his official capacity, is liable for the amount if he fails or refuses to pay it over to the person or persons entitled thereto,[86] in the absence of a valid excuse for such failure or refusal, as considered infra § 96. So an officer who receives money or a draft from a garnishee in garnishment proceedings is liable in damages for returning it to the garnishee without authority.[87]

Where sale not made by levying officer. An officer who levies execution and procures another officer to sell is liable for the failure of the latter to pay over the proceeds of sale to the execution plaintiff.[88]

Proceeds of property sold under mesne process. Where property seized on mesne process is sold before judgment, the sheriff is not in default or liable for not paying over the proceeds of such sale to the party at whose instance the process issued until the court has ordered him to do so,[89] and under some statutes a sheriff cannot be required to pay over such money, or be held liable for failure to do so, until final process has issued.[90]

c. Claim by third persons; attachment or garnishment of money
d. Recovery against officer for selling property

a. In General

A sheriff or constable is not liable for failure or refusal to turn over money where he is not in default or where the person claiming it is not entitled thereto; but he is liable to the person entitled thereto for all money collected under color of his office, whether or not he was in fact authorized to collect it, and even though the process or the judgment on which it issued was in fact invalid.

An action will not lie against a sheriff or constable for his failure or refusal to turn over money where he is not in default[91] or where the person claiming the money is not entitled thereto.[92] On the other hand, he is liable for all money collected under color of his office, whether or not he was in fact authorized to collect it;[93] and even though the process[94] or the judgment on which it issued[95] is in fact invalid, if the officer treats it as valid, for the purpose of collecting the money for plaintiff from his debtor, he cannot treat it afterward as invalid and withhold the money. Where a sheriff is authorized under certain circumstances to sell attached property without obtaining an order therefor, he is estopped in a proceeding against him to account for the proceeds of property so sold to set up that the sale was not properly made and therefore claim that he is not liable to account for the money.[96]

Various circumstances have been held sufficient[97] or insufficient[98] to excuse an officer for failure or refusal to pay over money. It is no excuse for the failure of an officer to pay over money collected under final process that he retained the money merely because defendant in execution insisted on its application to some other debt[99] or because he desired the direction of the court as to the application thereof.[1] The fact that an execution issued for a smaller sum than that for which judgment was rendered furnishes no excuse for the sheriff who has collected it for failing to pay to the creditor the money so collected,[2] and an injunction against paying out a portion of a fund does not excuse the officer's failure to pay out the remainder.[3] The fact that the person entitled to money in the sheriff's possession has once refused to receive the money does not relieve the sheriff from liability if the person entitled to the money subsequently demands it and he refuses to pay it over.[4] However, an officer who releases a levy on receiving the money to cover the amount of the execution, and agrees that such money is held subject to the disposition of the "matter" according to law, is not liable to return such money to the execution defendant after an appeal has been taken, which is dismissed for failure to file a sufficient appeal bond.[5]

Receipt of money after return day of writ. A sheriff who receives money on an execution after the return day is not liable therefor to the execution plaintiff in his official capacity[6] although he is personally liable for the amount.[7]

Recovery of judgment against deputy. It has been held that, since a sheriff and his deputy are jointly and separately liable to the execution creditor for moneys collected by the deputy, a recovery of a judgment against the deputy is no bar to an action against the sheriff while such judgment remains unsatisfied.[8]

b. Right of, or Payment to, Another Person in General

It is a good defense to an action against a sheriff for not paying over money to a certain person that such money has been rightfully paid to another.

It is a sufficient answer to an action against a sheriff for not paying over money to a certain person that such money has been rightfully paid to another,[9] and a general plea of payment is a proper defense to an action to recover from a sheriff the surplus proceeds of an execution sale.[10] However, a sheriff who is called on by rule to pay over to the execution plaintiff the proceeds of the sale cannot set up as a defense inferior liens in favor of attaching creditors who, although made parties to the rule, do not make such claim for themselves.[11]

c. Claim by Third Persons; Attachment or Garnishment of Money

A sheriff or constable is not liable for failing or refusing to pay over money claimed by a third person where the claim is supported by litigation or other legal procedure, but a mere notice of a claim to the money by a third person will not justify a sheriff or constable in withholding it from the plaintiff under whose process it was received.

Where the statute provides that the proceeds of sales on execution shall be paid into court, or otherwise disposed of as the court or judge may order, it requires the disobedience by the sheriff of an order of court, or the judge thereof, to put the sheriff in default as to an execution plaintiff, where there is a pending action by a third person against the sheriff, claiming the property or proceeds of the sale thereof on execution.[12] However, a mere notice by a third person stating that he holds a claim against the execution creditor, and has sued out an attachment against him as a nonresident, and requiring the sheriff to retain money collected until the next term of court, will not justify the sheriff in withholding the money from plaintiff under whose process he received it.[13] So, where a judgment is assigned and the property sold on execution issued at the instance of the assignee, an action against the judgment creditor, to which the assignee is not a party, together with a proceeding in attachment against such creditor, and a notice of garnishment served on the sheriff, is no justification for the sheriff's refusal to pay over to the assignee the proceeds of the execution sale.[14]

Notification not to pay over money. It is no justification of the failure of a sheriff to pay over money collected on execution that he was notified not to pay over such money, on the ground that the estate of defendant was insolvent, and therefore returned the money into court, and asked direction as to its payment, where it does not appear that such estate was insolvent in fact or that it had been so declared by the probate court before the levy of the execution.[15] Similarly, a mere direction by an execution debtor to a sheriff not to pay over to plaintiff money made on the execution is not a sufficient excuse for not paying it over.[16] So, where a sheriff who had sold the interest of one partner in the partnership goods, which was brought by the other partner, was called on to pay over the proceeds to the execution plaintiff, he could not excuse his default by showing that, some time before, he had been notified by one claiming to be a creditor of the firm not to pay over such proceeds.[17]

Attachment or garnishment of money. It is no defense to an action against a sheriff for not paying over money collected on execution that such money was garnished in the hands of a deputy sheriff,[18] and a service of summons of garnishment on defendant in execution will not avail the sheriff himself in an answer to a rule against him to show cause why he should not pay the money due on the execution.[19]

d. Recovery against Officer for Selling Property

A sheriff or constable cannot be held liable for not paying over money collected by him on the sale of property under process where a recovery equal to or exceeding the amount of the execution has been had against him for selling the property.

A sheriff or constable cannot be held liable for not paying over money collected by him on execution, where a recovery has been had against him for selling the property, by the sale of which the money collected by him was made, and such recovery equals or exceeds the amount of the execution,[20] and this is true although the execution plaintiff on the delivery of the process executed a bond of indemnity to the officer who sued thereon.[21] However, a party who elects to proceed in an action of trespass against an officer for selling his property under void process, and recovers therein, is precluded from bringing suit against the officer for an admitted balance remaining in his hands, the proceeds of the sale, after satisfying the amount for which the process issued.[22]

§ 97. —— Extent of Liability

A sheriff is liable for the full amount of money collected by him which he fails or refuses to pay to the person entitled thereto.

In an action against a sheriff for failure to pay over money, he is liable for the full amount collected,[23] or, if he unlawfully extends credit to the buyer, for the amount which he should have collected;[24] and the damages recoverable are the same, whether the action is brought in the name of the creditor of record or that of the real owner of the judgment.[25] The sheriff, however, is entitled to credit for lawful costs and a reasonable sum for his expense in taking care of the property prior to the sale.[26] In an action against a sheriff to recover the amount of an execution collected by him, plaintiff is not entitled to recover as costs fees coming to his attorney on the judgment obtained by him for plaintiff on which the executions were issued, plaintiff not having paid these fees to the attorney.[27] Where, in an action against a sheriff for money collected by him on an execution in favor of plaintiff, it appeared, from the return indorsed by the sheriff on the execution, that he had paid part of the sum levied to a certain person for rents due and demanded for the property where the goods seized were located, it was held that the sheriff must be deemed to have paid the rent in plaintiff's behalf and for his benefit, and plaintiff was entitled to recover no more than the residue of the sum levied after deducting the amount paid for the rent.[28]

Receipt of depreciated currency by officer. An officer proceeded against for failure to pay over money collected cannot reduce his liability by showing that the payment was received by him in a depreciated currency.[29]

§ 98. Delay in Paying Over Money

A sheriff is liable for the damages caused by an improper delay in the payment of money in his possession to the person entitled thereto.

A sheriff may be held liable for an improper delay in paying money in his hands to the person entitled thereto,[30] and if the money has in the meanwhile depreciated he may be compelled to pay other and good money.[31] However, he is guilty of no breach of duty and incurs no liability by failure to pay over money before the return day of the process under which it was collected.[32] If both plaintiff and defendant consent that the sheriff sell property levied on on credit, they cannot complain that he does not pay the proceeds immediately on the sale.[33]

G. LIABILITIES ARISING OUT OF TAKING BOND OR SECURITY

§ 99. Failure to Take Bond

Where it is the duty of a sheriff to take a bond for the protection of a person and he acts without exacting such bond, he becomes liable for the resulting damage.

Where it is the duty of a sheriff to take a bond for the protection of a person before taking certain steps and he takes such steps without exacting such bond, he thereby becomes liable for the resulting damage.[34] So, where an officer fails to take a bond from plaintiff in replevin, as required by statute, he becomes liable to defendant as a trespasser if he takes the property from his possession.[35] However, a sheriff cannot be held liable in damages for failure to take a bond from a defendant arrested on civil process, unless plaintiff shows that he recovered judgment in the action in which the arrest was ordered.[36] Where, under the statute, the officer making a levy under an execution may take a delivery bond, his failure to take such bond places the risk as to the property on him, and, where such property is not forthcoming on the day of sale, he is personally liable to the execution creditor.[37]

In bail trover, if the officer fails to take bail from defendant, he is liable to plaintiff for the resulting damage.[38] Where there is more than one defendant, and the sheriff takes a bond from defendant who has possession of the property, he is not liable for failure to take bond from the other defendants.[39]

§ 100. Failure or Refusal to Deliver or Return Bond

A sheriff may be liable for failure to deliver or return a bond.

Where a sheriff returns on an original writ that he has taken bail, but refuses to deliver the bond, he is liable for such default,[40] and a sheriff who fails to return a replevin bond[41] or a release bond[42] as required by law is liable for the resulting damage.

§ 101. Acceptance of Insufficient or Defective Bond

a. In general
b. Insufficient sureties

a. In General

A sheriff who accepts a bond which is defective in form or insufficient in amount, and for that reason does not afford the proper protection to the person for whose protection it is taken, may be held liable for the resulting damage.

A sheriff who accepts a bond which is defective in form, and for that reason does not afford the proper protection to the person for whose protection it is taken, may be held liable for the resulting damage,[43] notwithstanding such person has failed seasonably to take advantage of the defect.[44] However, where the officer takes and returns with his writ a sufficient replevin bond, the fact that an imperfect bond is also found among the papers, even if placed there by the officer, will not render the good bond void, or make him liable for a failure to take a sufficient bond.[45] Where it becomes the duty of a sheriff to take a bond conditioned in a particular manner, he is liable if he accepts a bond conditioned otherwise.[46]

Bond not conforming to statute. Where the statute makes it the duty of sheriffs to collect fines, the taking of a bond not in conformity with statutory requirements does not acquit the sheriff of liability for a fine adjudged against a prisoner in his custody,[47] and this is true, even though the bond taken is valid as a common-law bond.[48] So, if an officer, indemnified by an execution creditor, is protected only by the delivery bond of a claimant of the property levied on and advertised for sale under an execution for the debt of another, and such bond, although good as a common-law obligation, is invalid as a statutory forthcoming bond, and the officer permits the possession of the property to remain undisturbed, so that it is not produced for sale, he is liable in damages to the execution creditor,[49] even though such creditor approved claimant's bond before the acceptance by the officer.[50]

Bond with forged signatures. An officer who is lawfully directed to arrest a defendant is answerable to plaintiff, if he takes a bail bond to which the sureties' names are forged, and thereupon discharges defendant from custody.[51]

Bond in insufficient amount. Where the sheriff is invested with the power to determine the amount of a bond to be taken by him in the course of his duties or the amount of the bond is fixed by statute, he is liable if he negligently accepts a bond in an insufficient amount.[52]

b. Insufficient Sureties

Where a sheriff is required to take a bond with sufficient sureties, he is liable if he willfully or negligently accepts a bond with insufficient sureties.

Where a sheriff is required to take a bond with sufficient sureties, he is liable if he willfully or negligently accepts a bond with insufficient sureties,[53] or with an improper person as surety,[54] whether his acceptance is evidenced by a formal approval in writing, or by merely executing the process without a formal approval of the bond;[55] and the failure of the sureties to justify is satisfactory evidence that they are not qualified, notwithstanding their affidavit to the contrary, attached to the undertaking.[56] The good faith of the officer will not protect him from liability if he has been negligent,[57] and it is not essential to his liability that he should have known the sureties to be insufficient.[58] However, where one of the sureties is sufficient, the officer is not liable, although the other is insufficient.[59]

Improper justification. Where the statute requires sureties in replevin bonds to swear that they are worth sums amounting in the whole to the penalty of the bond, "over and above all debts and exemptions," the omission of the words "and exemptions" in the oath of one surety renders the officer liable as a trespasser ab initio.[60]

Necessity of exceptions. In order to hold the sheriff liable for taking a replevin bond with insufficient sureties, it is not necessary that objection be made to their insufficiency,[61] unless the statute so requires.[62]

Liability as guarantor of sufficiency. Some cases hold that the officer is absolutely liable for the sufficiency of sureties accepted by him, and cannot escape liability by any showing of diligence,[63] but the weight of authority is that the officer is not a guarantor or insurer of the sufficiency of sureties accepted by him, and, if he has acted in good faith and exercised reasonable care and diligence to ascertain their sufficiency, he is not liable if they ultimately prove insufficient.[64]

Insolvency or insufficiency occurring after acceptance. According to some authorities the sheriff is answerable for the solvency and sufficiency of sureties accepted by him, not only at the time when the bond is accepted, but also at the time when the sureties are called on to respond to their obligations,[65] but, even where this rule is recognized, it is conceded to establish a hardship only tolerated because of established precedent and not to be extended to a case not clearly within the precedent,[66] and the preponderance of authority supports the view that, if the sureties were sufficient when they were accepted, the sheriff cannot be held liable because they have subsequently become insolvent or insufficient.[67]

Bond with insufficient number of sureties. Where the law requires a certain number of sureties, the sheriff is liable if he accepts a bond with a smaller number and the bond proves insufficient,[68] although the sureties on the bond were apparently sufficient in respect of credit and means when the bond was accepted.[69]

Bond without sureties. Where the statute requires an officer before executing certain process to take a bond with sureties for the protection of defendant, he is liable as a trespasser if he accepts a bond without sureties, and proceeds with the process.[70] So, where a sheriff, on a sale of property on credit, accepts a bond without a surety, he is liable for the amount of the bond,[71] and the acceptance of the purchaser's wife as surety is equivalent to taking no surety.[72]

§ 102. To Whom Officer Liable and Conditions Precedent to Liability

The liability of a sheriff for failure to take a proper bond exists only in favor of a party to whom he owed a duty in the premises, to whose benefit the bond would accrue, and who has been damaged by his default.

The liability of a sheriff for failure to take a proper bond exists only in favor of a person to whom he owed a duty in the premises, to whose benefit the bond would accrue, and who has been damaged by his default.[73]

A sheriff cannot be held liable for the acceptance of insufficient sureties until such a judgment has been rendered as to charge the bond,[74] or there has been such a breach of the condition that the liability of the sureties has accrued,[75] and an execution has been issued against the sureties and returned unsatisfied.[76] On the other hand, it has been held not a prerequisite to an action against an officer who has taken insufficient bail that proceedings should first be brought against the bail,[77] and that an action will lie against a sheriff for taking insufficient sureties on replevin bonds when plaintiff had brought one suit on both bonds, which had failed because the makers could not be found.[78]

Where, in a suit on a prison bounds bond, a court of competent jurisdiction has adjudged the bond to be invalid, plaintiff may sue the sheriff without appealing from such judgment.[79] Where a sheriff who has seized goods in replevin delivers them to plaintiff in replevin, without requiring a sufficient bond as provided by statute, the act of delivery is an exercise of authority and dominion, which deprives the replevin defendant of his property, and furnishes evidence of a conversion sufficient to support an action against the sheriff without proof of a previous demand.[80]

A sheriff cannot be held liable for failure to take a bond where he was not under a legal obligation to do so.

Where a sheriff is under no legal obligation to take a bond for the benefit of a party, he cannot be held liable for failure to take a bond,[81] or, if he does take a bond, for the insufficiency of the sureties.[82] An officer cannot be held liable for taking insufficient security unless the obligation of seeing that the security was sufficient rested on him, and he acted on insufficient security when he might legally have reframed because of such insufficiency.[83] It has been held that the fact that the principal is insolvent does not excuse the officer from liability for taking insolvent sureties on a prison bounds bond.[84] An agreement by defendant in replevin to discharge a sheriff from liability for nonjustification of the sureties on the replevin bond, on his delivery to defendant of the property replevied, has been held void.[85]

Irregularities or defects in bond or in proceedings in which given. It is no defense to an action against a sheriff for accepting insufficient sureties on a replevin bond that such bond did not run to the proper obligee;[86] but, where bail given on mesne process is insufficient, the sheriff, when sued for damages, may defend on the ground that the writ of scire facias was radically defective.[87]

Sufficiency of recourse on bond. Where a bond taken by an officer is merely irregular and not void, and when recourse to the bond would afford the person for whose benefit the bond was taken all the relief to which he is entitled, he cannot hold the officer liable.[88] So, where the sheriff assigns a replevin bond to defendant, suit cannot be brought against the sheriff by the assignee, until judicial proof of the insolvency of the obligors in the bond is produced.[89]

Attempt to enforce bond. Where a sheriff takes an insufficient bond, the person for whose benefit the bond was taken does not lose his remedy against the sheriff by attempting to enforce the bond,[90] but, where a replevin bond is in an insufficient amount, but the replevin defendant nevertheless resorts to his remedy under the bond, he waives his right to hold the sheriff as a trespasser.[91]

Release of surety. The release of a surety in a replevin bond by defendant in replevin releases the sheriff from liability for taking insufficient security.[92]

The measure of damages for a sheriff's or constable's failure to take proper security is the actual loss suffered in consequence thereof.

In accordance with the general rule governing damages for a sheriff's or constable's default, the measure of damages for failure of the officer to take security or for taking insufficient security is the actual loss suffered in consequence thereof,[93] including sums reasonably expended by plaintiff in endeavoring to avail himself of the bond taken.[94] Thus, an officer may escape liability for taking insufficient security where no injury resulted from his default.[95] The measure of damages, where insufficient bail or other security is taken, may be the amount of the debt,[96] or of plaintiff's judgment against the debtor if it represents his actual loss,[97] or of his judgment against the bail, after deducting what he might probably be able to collect on it, and on his judgment against the principal.[98] So, where there is no proof of the insolvency of a debtor who has absconded, the liability of an officer for failure to take bail is the full amount of the debt;[99] but the liability of a sheriff for accepting insufficient sureties cannot exceed that of the sureties themselves.[1] Where the statute makes the sheriff responsible for defendant's sureties on a redelivery bond in replevin, the measure of the liability of a sheriff who took an insufficient bond is the amount plaintiffs were entitled to recover on such bond.[2]

§ 105. —— Mitigation of Damages

The inability of the debtor to pay the judgment rendered against him in the suit in which he was arrested may be shown in mitigation of damages in an action against the sheriff for taking insufficient bail.

In an action by a defendant in replevin against the officer who served the writ for taking an informal bond, by reason of which the suit was dismissed, the officer may show, in mitigation of damages, that the property replevied was, at the time of the service of the replevin, and had since remained, the property of plaintiff in replevin, and was in his possession.[3] So, in an action on the case against the sheriff for taking insufficient bail, it is competent for defendant to prove in mitigation of damages the inability of the original debtor to pay the judgment which has been obtained against him in the suit in which he was arrested.[4] On the other hand, it has been held that an officer's liability for taking insolvent sureties to a prison bounds bond of a debtor arrested on an ad capias satisfaciendum cannot be mitigated by showing that the debtor is an insolvent.[5]

Failure to deliver bond. Where a sheriff returns on an original writ that he has taken bail, but refuses to deliver the bond, he cannot show in mitigation of damages that the original debtor is poor or insolvent and unable to pay the debt,[6] but he may show the insolvency of the bail in mitigation of damages.[7]

§ 106. —— Nominal Damages

Nominal damages may be awarded where no actual damage is sustained.

7. R.I.—Bradt v. Holden, supra.

In certain cases, where it was made to appear not only that defendant was insolvent, but that he could be taken on execution at any time, plaintiff has been awarded nominal damages only, for the officer's default.[8] So, it has been held that, where plaintiff in replevin was entitled to possession of the property as mortgagee, and title finally vested in him by foreclosure, defendant in replevin suffered no actual damages because of the sheriff's failure to take bond, and could recover only nominal damages for the default.[9]

§ 107. Liability of Officer as Bail

Under some statutes, an officer who arrests a defendant under civil process, and permits him to go at large without bail, or on insufficient bail, or without taking the proper steps with respect to the bail bond, may be held liable as special bail.

Under the statutes in some jurisdictions, an officer who arrests a defendant under civil process, and permits him to go at large without bail, or on insufficient bail, or without taking the proper steps with respect to the bail bond, may be held liable as special bail[10] Such liability is the same as that of the sureties, where a proper undertaking has been given,[11] and accrues when, and only when, the officer's neglect can, by a proper construction of the statute, be held to fall within its terms.[12] Where the circumstances are such that the sheriff had no power to take bail, he cannot, on a failure to produce the prisoner, be held as bail;[13] but his liability is for the escape.[14] So, it has been held that the sheriff does not become liable as special bail where, after he has committed a debtor on mesne process, he permits him to go at large;[15] and a sheriff cannot be charged with liability as bail where plaintiff furnished the debtor with articles by means whereof he made his escape,[16] or where a sheriff returns on a writ of capias ad respondendum that defendant broke custody before he reached the jail.[17]

Deposit in lieu of bail. Where a sheriff accepts a cash deposit from a third person in lieu of bail, he is liable as special bail under the statute making him liable as such when he fails to take, or takes an insufficient, bail bond;[18] and, where the receipt of the deposit is illegal, and the sheriff has admitted his liability as special bail by paying the money into court, the payor, being in pari delicto with the sheriff, cannot recover the amount from him.[19]

Conditions precedent to liability. In order to hold a sheriff liable as bail, any statutory conditions precedent to the liability of the principal must be complied with, such as the issuance of an execution against the property of the principal and its return unsatisfied, or proof that he is a nonresident;[20] but it is not essential to the maintenance of such an action that an execution against the body of defendant should be issued and returned unsatisfied.[21]

Necessity of judgment sufficient to charge sureties. Where a sheriff releases a defendant arrested on mesne process, on bond being given, he cannot be held liable for the failure of the sureties to justify on being excepted to, where the final judgment rendered in the case is not such as to charge the sureties.[22]

Exceptions and notice. Where the statute provides for exceptions to the bond and notice to the officer, the officer cannot be held liable as bail, unless exceptions are taken in due time,[23] and notice given;[24] and there must be a judgment declaring the insufficiency of the bail[25] and adjudging that the officer stand as special bail.[26] Such a statute has been held to require exceptions and notice only where the officer takes insufficient bail, but not where he fails to take bail,[27] and, where the paper returned by the sheriff is so defective and imperfect as to be adjudged not a bail bond, there is a failure to take bail within such rule.[28]

§ 108. —— Relief from, or Waiver of, Liability

A sheriff is relieved from liability as special bail by any plea and method of escaping liability which would exonerate bail.

Since the liability of the officer is the same as that of ordinary bail, he is entitled to every plea and method of escaping liability which would exonerate bail, and every other plea adapted to his peculiar situation by way of defense,[29] although, on the other hand, it has been held that, where a sheriff fails to take bail, he is not entitled to the privileges of bail.[30] Just as sureties on a bail bond may be discharged from liability by a valid surrender of their principal, so a sheriff or constable who, by his default, has rendered himself liable as bail may exonerate himself by surrendering the debtor into custody.[31]

Irregular judgment or process. A sheriff who has become liable as bail cannot escape liability because of the fact that the judgment in the original action is irregular and erroneous, where it is not void;[32] and he cannot object that the order of arrest was improperly or irregularly granted,[33] or take advantage of irregularities in the execution under which the debtor was arrested.[34]

Insolvency of debtor is not a defense to an action against the officer as bail,[35] although as discussed infra § 119, the contrary is true where the officer is sued, not as bail, but for an escape.

Waiver of liability. It has been held that, where a sheriff, liable as bail, has forty days to arrest the prisoner, under an execution against his person, and plaintiff's attorney directs the sheriff forthwith to return the execution, "Defendant not found," which he does, such direction is a waiver of the sheriff's liability as bail.[36] So, it has been held that the filing of a declaration in chief after receiving notice of special bail is a waiver of any objection to the sufficiency of the bail, and plaintiff cannot subsequently proceed against the sheriff on the ground of insufficiency of the bail.[37]

It has been held that a sheriff sued as bail cannot show the debtor's insolvency in mitigation of damages.

It has been held that a sheriff who is proceeded against as bail cannot show the insolvency of the debtor in mitigation of damages,[38] but, as discussed infra § 120, a contrary rule obtains where the sheriff is sued for the debtor's escape, and not as bail. A statute limiting the damages recoverable from a sheriff for escape of a prisoner arrested on mesne process, to the amount of damage sustained by the aggrieved party, has been held not to limit the liability of a sheriff as bail for such escape.[39]

H. LIABILITIES ARISING OUT OF DUTY TO RETURN PROCESS

§ 110. Failure to Make, or Delay in Making, Return

A sheriff or constable is liable if he fails to return a process or writ placed in his hands for service or execution.

Where a process or writ is placed in the hands of a sheriff or constable for service or execution, he is liable if he fails to return the process or writ[40] within the time which is allowed by law for the making of his return thereon,[41] and the fact that a return is made after the expiration of such time does not relieve him of liability for his default;[42] but in order to enforce such liability, it must be shown that the writ was actually placed in his hands for execution,[43] and that he actually failed to return it on the return day.[44] It is not necessary, however, that the officer should have been ruled to return the writ,[45] or that he was bound, under the instructions given him by plaintiff, to serve it[46]

Liability as trespasser ab initio. It has been held that an officer who seizes property under a writ, but fails to make return as required by law, becomes a trespasser ab initio,[47] and is liable for conversion of the property seized, without any demand by the owner for its return.[48]

Necessity of injury to party complaining. There is authority for the view that a sheriff cannot be held liable,[49] even for nominal damages,[50] for failure to return process at the proper time, unless the complaining party was injured by such default; but it has also been held that an execution creditor may recover nominal damages against a sheriff for neglect to return an unsatisfied execution, although he may have sustained no damages in consequence thereof.[51]

As a general rule the liability of a sheriff or constable for failure to return a writ within the proper time is not absolute, but he will be relieved from liability on a showing of circumstances which excuse his default.

As a general rule the liability of a sheriff or constable for failure to return a writ within the proper time is not absolute, but he may be relieved from liability on a showing of circumstances which excuse his default.[52] It has been held that a sheriff may excuse his default by showing that plaintiff in execution undertook to return the writ and that the officer delivered it to him for that purpose,[53] that the writ was mislaid and could not be found after careful search;[54] that, by mistake, the writ was erroneously addressed;[55] that the writ had been abolished by statute before the return day;[56] or that the writ was never regularly delivered to him[57]

It has been held that a sheriff or constable cannot escape liability for default in the return of process on the ground that he had more official business than he and his deputies could perform;[58] that he was deprived of the services of his clerk because of illness;[59] that the delay was due to a mistake as to the time for making return;[60] that plaintiff agreed that the sale of the property levied on be postponed,[61] that the officer was defendant in the process received by him for execution;[62] that he was plaintiff's agent for the collection of the debt on which the execution was issued;[63] that the property was already held under execution by another officer who made no claim thereto,[64] or that the writ was received only a short time before the return day.[65] Mere indulgence, without consideration, by an execution creditor to an officer who has collected the money affords him no excuse for failing to make the proper return

Where summons directed sheriff to make return within five days after service, the five-day period began to run at the time of service on all defendants named, and failure to return summons within five days after service on two defendants but at a time when fourteen individual defendants and a corporate defendant had not been served did not constitute a violation of duty of sheriff.—Sarelas v. of the execution.[66] The fact that plaintiff and defendant in attachment made a compromise by which a portion of the property was released from the attachment and the rest delivered to plaintiff is no excuse for not duly returning the attachment.[67] In an action by a mortgagee against a sheriff who made a sale under a decree of foreclosure to recover damages for the sheriff's failure to return the order of sale, whereby plaintiff was prevented from obtaining a deficiency judgment, the sheriff cannot escape liability because of the failure of plaintiff to enforce by execution a personal judgment taken in the foreclosure suit.[68]

Validity of process or judgment. Where an execution is issued from competent authority and duly authenticated, an officer cannot escape liability for failure to return the same by setting up that the writ is irregular,[69] or founded on an erroneous or voidable judgment.[70] On the other hand, an officer has been held excused from liability for failure to return a writ which is unauthorized,[71] or which, although regular on its face, is issued on a void judgment,[72] or is not founded on any judgment.[73] It as been held that the officer is not liable for failure to return an execution on or before the return day where the writ purports to have been issued for an amount greater than the actual judgment.[74]

Uncollectability of debt. A sheriff may avoid liability for failure to return an execution by showing that the money for which the writ issued could not have been collected by the use of proper official diligence.[75]

Insolvency of defendant. A mere showing that the execution defendant was insolvent does not absolve the sheriff from liability[76] at least for nominal damages,[77] for failure to return the execution, as this does not necessarily establish that the debt was not collectable,[78] especially where there is other evidence tending to show that defendant owned property subject to execution and within the sheriff's jurisdiction.[79]

Payment to plaintiff of amount due. While it has been held that, where plaintiff has received payment of the amount due him, he cannot hold the sheriff liable in damages for a failure to return or delay in returning the writ,[80] or at most can recover only nominal damages for the default, as discussed infra § 112, there is also authority for the view that the failure to return an execution within the time prescribed by law fixes the liability of the officer, which cannot be discharged by a subsequent tender of the amount due.[81]

Unsuccessful effort to make return. A sheriff may excuse his default in the return of a writ issued from another county, by showing that the execution with his return therein had in due time been enclosed and directed to the execution plaintiff, and sent by mail or some other safe conveyance, to the proper county.[82] So, where a sheriff acted in good faith in attempting to return an execution emanating from another county, and actually included it in a letter for the purpose of returning it, and put it in the post office addressed to the proper place, he was held not liable, although there was a mistake in the name of the person to whom it was addressed.[83] However, a sheriff is not excused from liability for failure to return an execution by the fact that he had indorsed a return on the writ and had gone to the clerk's office to file the same, but did not do so because of the absence of the clerk, where it does not appear that the filing could not have been made at another time.[84]

Offer to deliver writ to proper officer. A sheriff or constable may be protected from liability as for failure to return a writ by the fact that he has offered to deliver it to the proper officer before the return day;[85] but, where the law requires a writ to be returned to the court and not to the clerk, it is not a sufficient excuse to an officer for neglecting to return a process to the proper term of the court that he had tendered it to the clerk, who had refused to receive it, or that the clerk had died during the term.[86]

Indorsement of return on writ. The mere indorsement of a return on an execution does not avoid the liability of the sheriff for a failure to make an actual return to the clerk of the execution itself within the time required by law.[87] On the other hand it has been held that a manual delivery of execution to a justice, with the money collected, relieves an officer from liability, although he did not indorse his return on the writ.[88]

Renewal of writ. A sheriff is not liable for failure to return an execution where plaintiff has obtained, directed, or consented to a renewal of the writ,[89] but the renewal of an execution at the instance of an officer, without the consent of plaintiff, will not relieve such officer from liability for the damages sustained by plaintiff because of his failure to make return of the execution within the time named in the writ as provided by statute.[90]

Issuance of second writ. The issuing of a second execution after a sheriff has failed to return the first within the time prescribed does not release him from liability for his default,[91] especially where the alias writ was issued at the request of the sheriff and for his benefit,[92] although it has been held that in such case the officer is entitled to credit for the amount made on the subsequent execution in reduction of his liability.[93] On the other hand, it has been held that plaintiff in a writ, by procuring an alias writ, waives his right to proceed against the sheriff for failure to return the previous writ in due time.[94]

Attachment or replevin against plaintiff in execution. A sheriff is not excused for failure to return an execution because prior to the return day he received a warrant of attachment against plaintiff, a copy of which he served on the judgment debtor, and received a certificate acknowledging indebtedness to plaintiff in the amount of the judgment.[95] The fact that the debt has been replevied will not relieve the sheriff from liability for failure to return an execution.[96]

Appeal or writ of error. The taking of an appeal or the suing out of a writ of error does not excuse a sheriff for failure to return an execution unless a stay of execution has been obtained[97] and the undertaking for the stay is in proper form.[98]

Injunction or restraining order. While an injunction against the collection of a debt has been held not to excuse the failure of a sheriff to return an execution issued therefor,[99] it has also been asserted that, where a sheriff is restrained by an order of the United States court, made in a pending bankruptcy proceeding, from proceeding under an execution, the time for the return is thereby extended for as many days as the restraining order is in force, and no action can be maintained against him for failure to return the execution before the expiration of the extended time.[1]

Waiver or ratification of default. A waiver or ratification of the sheriff's default in returning process relieves him from liability.[2] Where an execution plaintiff treats the execution as being properly in the officer's hands after the return day, he waives his right of action against the officer for failure to return the writ.[3]

Termination of incumbency. A sheriff who goes out of office before the return day of a writ cannot be held liable for failure to return it unless he commenced to execute it while in office.[4] Under a statute providing that, if an officer to whom an execution has been delivered goes out of office before the writ has been executed, his successor shall proceed therein, a constable who, on going out of office, delivers an unexpired execution to his successor is not liable for failure to make a return.[5]

§ 112. —— Extent of Liability

As a general rule the liability of a sheriff or constable is for the actual loss sustained by his neglect to make a return.

An officer who fails to return an execution is prima facie liable for the whole amount thereof,[6] without deduction for expenses,[7] but he may relieve himself of such liability by showing that the execution creditor was not injured by his default,[8] or not injured to the extent of the entire debt;[9] and, hence, the general rule is that the liability of the officer is for the actual loss sustained by his neglect to make the return.[10] Where the officer's default was intentional, the jury may award, in addition to the amount of the debt, the costs and incidental expenses incurred by plaintiff.[11] In an action for failure to return a venditioni exponas, the value of the property levied on, which should have been sold, is the proper measure of damages.[12]

Exemplary damages. Although an officer becomes a trespasser ab initio by his failure to return a writ executed by him, as discussed supra § 110, if he does not act oppressively or improperly in executing such writ, he cannot, in an action of trespass, be held liable for exemplary damages,[13] and the malice entertained by plaintiff in the writ cannot be imputed to him.[14]

Interest is recoverable in a common-law action on the case for loss resulting from failure to return process.[15]

Mitigation of liability; nominal damages. In an action against a sheriff for failure to return an execution, it may be proved, in mitigation of damages, that prior to the return day plaintiff's interest in the judgment was levied on by virtue of an attachment, and was liable to be applied thereon,[16] and in such case only nominal damages are recoverable.[17] So, plaintiff has been held entitled only to nominal damages where he has received payment of the amount due him,[18] or where the return is made after the commencement of an action against him for failing to make a return of execution.[19] Even though the property levied on was not subject to attachment and could not have been subjected to any judgment recovered by plaintiff, the sheriff is liable for at least nominal damages for failure to return the attachment.[20] It has been held that a sheriff who failed to file a return could not, when sued for conversion, offset the amount realized from the property seized which was applied to the owner's benefit, unless the application was made with the owner's consent.[21]

Ownership of property A sheriff who is sued for failing to return an attachment may show in mitigation of damages that, by a mortgage and sale of the property levied on, previous to its seizure, defendant had parted with his interest.[22]

Collectability of debt. The fact that the debt is still collectable cannot serve to mitigate the damages in an action against a sheriff for failure to return an execution,[23] although there is contrary authority.[24] It may be shown in mitigation of damages that the debtor did not own sufficient property out of which the writ could have been satisfied.[25] A sheriff or constable who is sued for default in making return of process may show, in mitigation of damages, that the debtor was insolvent,[26] and proof of this fact and that the debtor had no property out of which any part of the debt could have been collected exempts the officer from more than nominal damages.[27]

§ 113. Insufficient or Defective Return, and Failure to Enter

A sheriff who makes an insufficient or defective return of process is liable for the resulting damage.

A sheriff who makes an insufficient or defective return is liable for the resulting damage,[28] as such return is in legal effect equivalent to no return at all.[29] A premature return may subject the officer to an action for damages.[30]

Failure to enter or verify return. A sheriff who has seasonably returned a writ is not responsible for the return not having been duly entered,[31] and, where a writ of attachment is directed to one, as an indifferent person, for service, and he takes the property into his possession, he does not become a trespasser merely by failing to verify his return.[32]

Relief from liability. The acceptance by a justice of the peace of a constable's return to an execution will not relieve the constable from liability, if it is in fact insufficient.[33] A plaintiff in execution who receives a part of his debt, which has been made by the officer, does not thereby waive the right to hold the officer liable for an insufficient return of the writ,[34] but, where a constable to whom a justice directs and delivers an execution erases his name therefrom and substitutes that of another constable, to whom he delivers the writ, such other constable incurs no liability for making an insufficient return.[35]

Issuance of alias writ; sale of property. The issuance of an alias writ does not operate as a waiver of the right to hold the officer liable for an insufficient return on the original writ;[36] and a sale of property levied on under a pluries venditioni exponas does not relieve the officer from liability for an insufficient return of any previous process.[37]

§ 114. False Return

A sheriff or constable who makes a false return to process is liable for any injury resulting therefrom.

A sheriff or constable who makes a false return to process in his hands is liable for any injury resulting therefrom.[38] However, it has been held that the mere fact that an officer's return is erroneous in some respect does not subject him to liability unless the error is properly attributable to some official misconduct or negligence,[39] and that a fraudulent intent on the part of the sheriff is necessary to render him liable for a false return,[40] but it has also been held a sheriff is liable for the damage resulting from a false return notwithstanding its falsity was unintentional.[41]

Necessity for injury to party complaining. In order to entitle a person to maintain an action against a sheriff for a false return, he must have sustained some damage by reason thereof.[42]

What constitutes false return. A "false return" is defined as a return made by the sheriff or other ministerial officer to a writ in which is stated as a fact something contrary to the truth and injurious to one of the parties or to someone having an interest in it.[43] As there is an obvious distinction between a false statement and a failure to state all the facts, a sheriff cannot be held liable as for a false return because he has failed to make a full return of all he did or of all the facts,[44] although it has been held in some cases that a failure to state all the facts may constitute a false return.[45] In order to make a return of nulla bona a false return, the sheriff must be informed, or chargeable with knowledge, that the debtor has goods in the county, and must have an opportunity to make a levy.[46] Where a sheriff makes a return to an execution, in the usual form, in an action for the claim and delivery of personal property, that he could not find the property so as to make delivery, and he knows where the property can be found within his county but refuses to take it, or to take any action in respect thereof on the ground that it is in the possession of a third person, his return is false.[47] The return of non est inventus by an officer, after an execution has run out in his hands, with a view to charge bail on mesne process, is a false return.[48]

To whom officer liable In case of a false return the sheriff is liable to the person injured thereby.[49] Thus one whom the sheriff falsely states he served with process may hold the sheriff liable [50] A sheriff making a false return may be liable to a person who is not a party to the suit in connection with which the return is made,[51] but it has been held that an action for a false return can be maintained only by a party to the proceedings in which the process was issued.[52]

Rights of surety on bail bond. In case of a recovery on an undertaking on arrest, and payment thereof, the bail is entitled to recover from the sheriff the amount so paid, where it appears that the sheriff's return was false.[53] Where a person becomes bail at the request of a third person, the sheriff is liable to him for a false return on the execution,[54] although such third person subsequently pays the bail the principal part of the judgment which the bail was compelled to pay [55]

Particular matters which have been held to affect or not to affect the liability of a sheriff or constable for making a false return include the validity of the process or judgment, title to the property sought to be attached, bankruptcy or insolvency of the debtor, and waiver or estoppel.

If process is regular on its face and issued by competent authority, an officer is not excused for a false return because the process was irregularly or erroneously issued,[56] but a false return to void process subjects the officer to no liability,[57] and the fact that the officer has treated the process as valid does not estop him to set up that it was void.[58] Where the circumstances are such that the elder of two writs must be deemed fraudulent and void as against a junior writ, the sheriff is not liable for applying goods levied on to the junior writ and returning nulla bona to the other.[59] Where there is statutory authority for the issuance of an execution to a county other than that in which the judgment was rendered, the issuance of two executions to different counties on the same day affords no defense to an officer who has made a false return on one of such executions.[60] The sheriff cannot protect himself from liability by showing that the judgment was void,[61] although such fact may be shown in mitigation of damages as discussed infra § 116.

An officer is not liable for a false return of nulla bona where the judgment on which the execution issued has since been reversed.[62] An amendment of the return, by leave of court, by striking out the false statement does not relieve the sheriff of liability.[63] The fact that in the regular course of practice an order of publication intervened between an officer's false return of non est to a summons and judgment by default will not shield him from liability for the false return[64] Where a summons was issued against a certain person, which the constable by mistake served on another person, and returned the summons "personally served," and judgment was rendered against the real defendant for a penalty alleged to have been incurred by the violation of a statute, the officer was entitled, in an action by such defendant against him for a false return, to show that defendant had been guilty of the offense.[65]

Title to property. In order to relieve himself from liability for a false return on an attachment levy, the sheriff is entitled to sustain his return of nulla bona by showing that the property in question was not the property of the attachment debtor,[66] and this may be done notwithstanding the sheriff's failure to demand indemnity from plaintiff in the writ.[67] The sheriff is not estopped to set up such defense because he had seized part of the property as owned by the debtor, and had made and filed a proper return, stating that he had so attached the property and taken an inventory thereof as the property of the debtor;[68] and he is not estopped by the fact that he had previously sold the property in a prior execution against the debtor, and paid over the surplus money to the purchaser at the sale, who claimed the property also by virtue of a bill of sale from the debtor.[69] However, the fact that a judgment debtor against whom an execution was issued held the property which had been levied on by an assignment fraudulent as to one of the assignors does not relieve the sheriff from liability for a false return on the execution, the other assignor having the right to convey.[70] A finding by a sheriff's jury in an inquisition that the property in goods taken on a fieri facias is not in defendant exonerates the sheriff from liability for a false return of nulla bona[71] unless it is shown that the sheriff did not act in good faith.[72] It has been held that, where the sheriff in an action against him for a false return does not set up a determination of a jury against the debtor's title in the special proceeding provided for by statute, or that the property was not in the debtor's possession, or that it was not clear that it belonged to him, the refusal of the judgment creditor, on demand, to indemnify the sheriff is no defense.[73]

Bankruptcy or insolvency of debtor. In an action against a sheriff for a false return of execution, a defense is available that the judgment debtors were bankrupts, and that the property levied on, or its proceeds, belonged to their assignees[74] A sheriff who makes a false return on a writ of execution is not exonerated by the fact that the execution defendant was insolvent.[75]

Improper direction of writ. Where an indifferent person who was not authorized to serve a writ of attachment for want of a legal direction made service in fact, his acting under the writ did not preclude him, in an action against him for a false return, from denying that the writ was legally directed to him.[76]

Failure of bail to complete proceedings for exoneration. The failure of a surety to an undertaking on arrest to complete proceedings for his exoneration will not wholly discharge the sheriff's liability incurred by a false return,[77] and a sheriff who prevents the surety from procuring exoneration is precluded from raising the objection in an action against him for rendering a false return that plaintiff did not complete the proceedings for his exoneration.[78]

Waiver or estoppel affecting right of action. The right to recover damages for a false return may be waived,[79] and a person cannot recover against a sheriff for an alleged false return of service of summons on him where he appeared in the action for the purpose of litigating the question whether he was before the court, and such question was decided in the affirmative.[80] However, where a sheriff returns on an execution that part of the debt has been made and that the debtor has no goods which can be levied on for the remainder, the creditor does not waive his right of action for a false return by accepting the amount collected.[81] So, a sheriff's liability for falsely returning that he had taken bail is not discharged by the creditor's omitting to demand the bail bond within a year after he has recovered judgment.[82] A subsequent attaching creditor is not estopped from maintaining an action against a sheriff for a false return of the sale of an equity of redemption on execution, by a representation, made by such creditor when acting as an auctioneer, that the land was under no encumbrance but the mortgage.[83]

§ 116. —— Extent of Liability

Where a sheriff makes a false return of process, the measure of damages is the injury suffered by the complaining party.

A sheriff who makes a false return on an execution is prima facie liable for the amount thereof,[84] but he may reduce his liability by showing that the loss resulting from the false return was less than that amount,[85] so that the real measure of damages for a false return is the injury suffered by the complaining party.[86] Where a deputy sheriff, having a writ of attachment against a person who had removed out of his precinct, falsely returned that he had left a summons at his last and usual place of abode, being the place of his late residence, and the judgment went by default, defendant having no notice of the suit, it was held that the officer was not liable for the cost of an application for a review of the original judgment,[87] or for the amount of such judgment until it had been proved erroneous by the successful termination of the proceedings to review it,[88] but, if the debt should prove to be due, the officer might be liable for the amount of the original costs.[89]

Where a litigant is prejudiced by a false return of the sheriff, but discovers the error in time to avoid such damages as would arise from proceeding further, the sheriff cannot be held liable for the consequences of the litigant so proceeding unless he assented thereto.[90] Where a sheriff makes a false return of personal service in an action on a special tax bill, by reason of which defendant's property is sold, the measure of damages is the reasonable value of the land when sold.[91]

Mitigation of damages. In an action against a sheriff for a false return on an execution, he may show, in mitigation of damages, that other executions in his hands would have taken the proceeds of a sale,[92] or that the judgment on which the execution was issued was void.[93] However, the officer cannot be permitted to show, in order to reduce damages, that the execution directed the collection of a greater sum than was due plaintiff.[94] A sheriff may show in mitigation of his prima facie liability for the amount of the execution that defendant had no property subject to execution,[95] but he cannot show that the judgment is still collectable.[96] So, also, where, in an action by a creditor against a sheriff for falsely returning that he had served on the creditor a copy of the notification that a debtor intended to take the poor debtor's oath, it appears that the copy actually served was such that the creditor, if he had chosen, might have been present at the examination, the officer may show in mitigation of damages that the debtor had no attachable or visible property;[97] and it has been held that the poverty of a debtor may mitigate the damages in an action against the sheriff for a false return on a capias that he had taken bail for the debtor's appearance.[98]

Where a sheriff, having in his hands final process against the body of a debtor, neglects an opportunity to arrest him, and afterward the debtor absconds and the sheriff returns "non est inventus," he cannot show the insolvency of the debtor in mitigation of damages in an action for the false return.[99] The failure of sureties on a bail bond to surrender their principal in accordance with the provisions of the statute after action begun on the bond and before answer, when such surrender was advised by the sheriff, and the sureties were able to make it, may be pleaded by the sheriff in mitigation of damages in an action on the sureties' claim for damages sustained by reason of the sheriff's false return to an execution issued against the person of the principal.[1]

I. OTHER LIABILITIES

§ 117. Liabilities as to Prisoners or Convicts

A sheriff or constable must exercise reasonable care under the circumstances to preserve the life, health, and safety of a prisoner in his custody, and he is liable to the prisoner or his representatives for negligent or wrongful acts causing his injury or death.

A sheriff owes a duty to a prisoner in his custody to keep him in health and free from harm.[2] He must exercise ordinary and reasonable care under the circumstances to preserve the life, health, and safety of a prisoner in his care and custody,[3] and he is liable to the prisoner or his representatives for negligent or wrongful acts causing his injury or death.[4] However, the fact that the sheriff enforces the law against a prisoner with malice does not render him liable where his conduct is not unlawful.[5] It has been held that a sheriff is liable to a prisoner where he fails to provide medical attention plainly and urgently needed by the prisoner,[6] but it has also been held that, in the absence of an express contract, a sheriff is not personally liable for medical services required by the condition of a prisoner by reason of a wound inflicted on him in making the arrest.[7]

Any cruel or unnecessary exposure of a prisoner to cold, or deprivation of suitable clothing or covering, while in the custody of the constable arresting him is unlawful, and the officer is liable therefor.[8] So a sheriff or constable is liable for an unlawful assault on a prisoner,[9] and he is also liable for an assault on a prisoner committed by others where he had reasonable grounds to anticipate the assault and did not take reasonable measures to protect the prisoner.[10] A sheriff has the right to take such measures as in his discretion may appear to be necessary to the identification and recapture of prisoners should they escape, and one so doing does not render himself liable in the absence of malice, wantonness, or a reckless disregard for the common dictates of humanity.[11] It has been held that a sheriff is not liable for an injury to a convict occurring while the latter is in the custody of a county convict contractor.[12]

Injuries by mobs or rioters. Unless provided otherwise by constitution or statute,[13] a sheriff cannot be held liable for injuries to persons or property suffered through the violence of mobs, riots, or insurrections,[14] where his failure to prevent the injury was due to physical inability to cope with the force confronting him,[15] but he is liable if he knowingly commits acts amounting to a participation in the unlawful purposes of the mob,[16] or if, having the force at hand to prevent the injury, he stands idle and permits it.[17]

As a general rule a sheriff is liable for the damage resulting from the escape of a prisoner in his custody.

As a general rule a sheriff is liable for the damage resulting from an escape of a prisoner in his custody,[18] provided he has such prisoner legally in his custody.[19] It is not essential to the maintenance of an action against an officer for the escape of a prisoner arrested on mesne process that a demand should be made on him for the body of defendant on final process in the original action[20] or that he should have written notice that such final process is in the hands of an officer for service.[21] In order to constitute an escape for which the sheriff is liable, it is necessary that there be some agency of the prisoner employed or some wrongful act of another against whom the law gives a remedy,[22] and no liability is incurred where a prisoner is removed from custody by legal process.[23] Where a sheriff commits a person arrested on mesne process to nonofficial control, and is unable to produce him on the return day, he is liable for an escape,[24] and there cannot be a subsequent escape without a new arrest;[25] but the officer may, at his peril, allow the debtor freedom from official restraint, provided he produce him at the proper time.[26] A sheriff is not liable to a prisoner or his representatives for injuries suffered in consequence of his escape.[27]

Effect of change in incumbency. A former sheriff is not liable for the escape of a prisoner during the term of his successor, although such prisoner was committed on civil process during his own term, if he has regularly delivered him to his successor,[28] but it has been held that it is not the imperative duty of a returning sheriff to sign over, at the end of his term, to the new sheriff, a debtor taken on execution, who is on the jail limits, so as to make the officer, if he fails to do so, liable to the judgment creditor in the amount of the debt, as for an escape.[29] It has also been held that a sheriff whose term of office has expired, and who has turned over to his successor the jail and prisoners actually therein, is not liable for a failure to deliver to him a prisoner in his custody on a body execution, if the new sheriff has not served the certificate of appointment as required by statute.[30]

A new sheriff who has regularly received a prisoner from his predecessor is liable for his escape,[31] although a voluntary escape may have existed in the time of his predecessor,[32] but the mere termination of the former sheriff's incumbency, without a regular assignment of the prisoner to the new sheriff, does not make the latter liable for a subsequent escape.[33] If plaintiff elects to sue the former sheriff and recovers, the judgment bars any action against the new sheriff for a fresh escape.[34]

§ 119. —— Relief from Liability

The sheriff is not liable for an escape where the process on which the prisoner was arrested was void, but he is not relieved from liability where the process was only irregular and voidable.

A sheriff is not relieved from liability for an escape by the fact that the process on which the prisoner was arrested was irregular and voidable,[35] but he is not liable for an escape where the process on which the prisoner was arrested was void[36] or insufficient to authorize the arrest.[37] So, if the court rendering judgment was without jurisdiction, the sheriff is relieved from liability for an escape,[38] but if the judgment is not void, but merely erroneous, the sheriff is not relieved from liability.[39]

Poverty or insolvency of debtor. In an action against a sheriff for an escape, the poverty or insolvency of the debtor may be shown in mitigation of damages, as discussed infra § 120, but it is not available as a bar to the action.[40] A sheriff who releases a debtor on an instrument not complying with the statute for the relief of insolvent debtors may be liable for an escape.[41]

Privilege from arrest. Where the person arrested is absolutely privileged from arrest, the officer incurs no liability by allowing him to escape,[42] but in some cases it has been held that, where the privilege is temporary and limited, the sheriff is liable for an escape if, on his own responsibility, he releases the prisoner.[43]

Discharge by order of court. The fact that a prisoner arrested under an execution in a civil action has been discharged from imprisonment by the order of a court or judicial officer having jurisdiction to make it is a good defense to the sheriff, in an action for escape, although the order was erroneously made and might have been avoided,[44] but it is otherwise where the order was granted without jurisdiction or is void on its face.[45] In any event, plaintiff by accepting benefits under the order of discharge may be estopped to claim that the prisoner's release was an escape for which the sheriff is liable.[46]

Waiver of right of action. Where, after the sheriff has become liable for an escape by taking an insufficient bond from a prisoner in contempt, the prosecutor takes an assignment of the bond after breach of its condition, and also takes an order for a further attachment, but fails to issue such further attachment, and the prisoner is surrendered by his bail, the prosecutor's right of action against the sheriff for the escape is waived.[47]

The actual loss sustained is the measure of damages for the escape of a prisoner arrested on mesne process.

A sheriff who allows a prisoner arrested on mesne process to escape is prima facie liable for the entire debt,[48] but may reduce his liability by showing that the creditor was not injured to that extent,[49] thus making the actual loss the real measure of damages.[50] According to some authorities the same rule applies in case of an escape of a prisoner arrested on final process;[51] but other authorities hold that where a debtor is arrested on final process his escape renders the sheriff absolutely liable for the debt.[52] A sheriff who illegally releases a prisoner sentenced for default in payment of a fine is liable to the county authorities for the amount of the fine.[53]

Mitigation of damages. Where a plaintiff, having obtained security from defendant for his debt, relinquishes it, after knowledge of an escape, the sheriff may avail himself of such fact in mitigation of damages, in an action against him for the escape.[54] So it may be shown in mitigation of damages that the debt could not have been made out of the debtor.[55] The poverty or insolvency of the debtor may be shown in mitigation of damages in an action against an officer for an escape.[56]

General rules with respect to liability for the use of excessive force in making an arrest, and for unlawful arrests, by public officers apply to sheriffs and constables.

The general rules with respect to the force which may be used by public officers in making an arrest, as discussed in Arrest § 11 et seq, apply to sheriffs and constables.[57] Thus a sheriff or constable is liable for an assault where in performing his duties he uses unnecessary force and a person is thereby injured.[58] Where a sheriff had arrested one by mistake for another, and under the mistake shot at him, when escaping, he was held liable if he could, with due care and diligence, have ascertained his mistake before shooting.[59] A sheriff who, in attempting to arrest, without a warrant, a person guilty at most of a misdemeanor, shoots such person while he is running away is liable to him for the injury sustained.[60] So a sheriff or constable who, attempting to make an arrest without a warrant, shoots a third person accompanying the person sought to be arrested is liable therefor,[61] and the person shot is not guilty of contributory negligence because, in the general excitement, not knowing which way to go to escape injury, he runs into the range of fire intended for his companion.[62]

Where officers, without a warrant, agreed to intercept travelers on a certain highway, on information that liquor was being unlawfully transported, and, in following out such agreement, one of the officers shot at innocent travelers who refused to stop, all of the officers are liable for the resulting injury,[63] and it is no defense that the other officers did not agree to do any shooting, the agreement to intercept travelers being the proximate cause of the injury;[64] and it is not a defense that there was, unknown to the person injured, a pint of liquor in the car in which he was traveling,[65] or that the occupants of the car, without knowledge of the identity of the officers, violated the speed laws in trying to escape,[66] or that the officers acted in good faith and on the advice of the city attorney that they were authorized to stop travelers unlawfuly transporting liquor.[67] In preventing the escape of one arrested for a misdemeanor, a sheriff or constable may not use greater force than would be proper in effecting the arrest and may not take life or inflict great bodily harm except to prevent like injury to himself.[68] A sheriff may be liable for false imprisonment where he refuses to permit one arrested for a misdemeanor to give an appearance bond.[69]

False arrest. The general rules as to the liability of a public officer who makes an unlawful arrest, as discussed in False Imprisonment §§ 14-35, have been applied to sheriffs and constables.[70]

Injury to property in making arrest. An officer who, in making a lawful arrest of a person attempting to escape in an automobile, shoots at the tires of the automobile in order to stop it is not liable for injury to the car.[71]

Taking arrested person before wrong magistrate. A sheriff who arrested a person for drunkenness and took him before a trial justice in an adjoining town, instead of one in the town wherein the arrest was made, as required by statute, has been held to be a trespasser[72] and liable for false imprisonment.[73]

Seizure and detention of property on making arrest for larceny. An officer on arresting a person charged with larceny has no right to take from him property other than that alleged to have been stolen, and if he does so is liable in damages.[74] So, although an officer serving a warrant for larceny may lawfully take from defendant goods alleged to have been stolen,[75] he is liable for conversion if he refuses to return them on defendant's being discharged,[76] and he is not excused from liability because complainant in the criminal process had obtained judgment against him on his default for conversion of the property, and taken it away from him on execution, where complainant was not in fact the owner of the property.[77]

Furnishing erroneous information. Where a surety on a poor debtor's bond, before the condition had expired, applied to the sheriff for information as to its date, and the officer stated to him a time later than its true one, the surety could not maintain an action against the officer in consequence of such erroneous statement unless he knew it to have been false or made it with an intention to deceive.[78]

Failure to record assignment Where a deed of assignment of an insolvent person, executed in pursuance of the assignment laws, in favor of the sheriff as assignee, is rendered void because of the latter's failure to have it filed and recorded within the time required by law, and by reason thereof the property of the insolvent is lost to the general creditors, the sheriff is liable to such creditors;[79] and it is not a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action by a creditor who has thus suffered loss that he should have his claim against the insolvent filed with, and approved by, the county court.[80]

Trespass. A sheriff who trespasses on the property of one engaged in violating the law may be civilly liable for the trespass.[81]

a. General Rule

It is a well-established general rule that the process, judgment, or order of a court having apparent jurisdiction, if valid on its face, affords complete protection to a sheriff or constable from liability for any proper or necessary act done in its execution.

yond the face of the judgment or order.[83] A sheriff or constable is protected by anything which may properly be considered as process or judgment,[84] even a municipal ordinance under which the officer acts,[85] but he is not protected by matter not properly considered process or judgment of the court.[86] Thus an instrument signed by a sheriff, directing his deputy to rearrest a defendant for failure of his bail to justify, is not process, within the rule that process regular on its face protects those acting under it.[87]

Statutes protecting officers from liability in the execution of process are to be liberally construed.[88] Where the statute provides for the foreclosure of chattel mortgages by notice of sale, a sheriff who seizes and sells under such a notice incurs no liability to the mortgagor, although the latter protested against the sheriff's action, where he did not avail himself of a method provided by statute for preventing an unauthorized foreclosure.[89] A sheriff is not protected where he acts in other than his official capacity.[90] It has been held that the protection from liability afforded by apparently valid process is personal to the officer executing it, and affords no shelter to a wrongdoer under color of whose process the officer is called on to act,[91] but it has also been held that, where a sheriff acts in response to a mandate of the court, the party at whose instance the mandate was issued is not responsible for his acts.[92]

Protection of deputies and special officers. A deputy sheriff or constable executing process is entitled to the same protection in respect of his acts in connection therewith as would be afforded his principal,[93] and this rule applies to a special constable appointed to make an arrest.[94]

Protection of coroner acting as sheriff A coroner performing the duties of sheriff is entitled to the same protection in the execution of apparently valid process as would be accorded the sheriff.[95]

Protection of persons assisting sheriff. Persons aiding an officer in the execution of apparently valid process are protected from liability, even though the process was in fact invalid, where they have acted in good faith under the command of the officer,[96] and the property levied on was actually taken by the officer under his process,[97] but if they were mere volunteers in the service or acted officiously they must show a valid process in order to escape liability,[98] and if the process is void on its face it furnishes no protection even though the person aiding the officer did so at his command.[99] A person assisting an officer, in order to be protected, need not remain in the actual presence of the officer, if the two are in the same neighborhood, and acting in concert, the officer giving orders, and the other obeying them.[1]

Authority to execute process. A sheriff or constable who seeks to justify his acts by a claim that he acted under legal process must show that he was authorized to execute such process,[2] since, although process is valid and properly issued, it can afford no protection to an officer who is not authorized to execute it.[3]

Necessity for showing justification. In case of an action against the officer by the party against whom process is issued, the process itself, being valid on its face, constitutes a complete justification,[4] but in case of a suit by a third person claiming title to the property seized, under the party against whom process issued, which title is contested on the ground of fraud, the officer must, in addition to showing that he acted under such process, show that he acted for, or on behalf of, a creditor.[5] So, under such circumstances, when the officer claims to have acted under process of execution he must produce the execution[6] and the judgment on which it issued,[7] and such judgment must be valid in order to entitle the officer to protection.[8] Some authorities, however, have held that, where a third person claims property taken under a writ regular on its face, the sheriff need not, in order to justify the seizure, produce the judgment[9] unless he has occasion to rely thereon.[10] It has also been held that voluntary assignees of a debtor, who became such after a levy under an execution, are not strangers within the rule which requires an officer justifying against a stranger to show a judgment as well as an execution,[11] and such an assignee cannot impair the sheriff's right to retain the goods levied on by attacking the judgment[12]

If the officer claims to have acted under mesne process in seizing the property claimed by a stranger to the process, the debt must be proved by some competent evidence,[13] and the officer must show a valid writ,[14] regularly issued on proper proceedings,[15] by a court having jurisdiction of the parties as well as of the subject matter of the suit,[16] and, after trespass has been brought by the person claiming title, defects in the service of the process cannot be cured by taking out a new writ.[17] Where, however, a sale by the debtor of property seized under mesne process is merely colorable, or only a transfer of possession merely for concealment, with no intention of transferring the title, the writ alone, if regular on its face and emanating from a tribunal having jurisdiction of the subject matter, is a full protection to the officer.[18]

Return of process. In order to be protected from liability for acts done in the execution of mesne process, the sheriff must make his return thereon[19] within the time prescribed by the statute,[20] or at least show a legal excuse for his failure to do so;[21] but a return is not necessary to entitle the officer to protection in the execution of final process.[22] A search warrant reciting the essential facts of a complaint as enumerated in the statute, and otherwise complying with the provision requiring a return where the person or thing searched for is found, and bearing the return statement "nothing found," is sufficient to protect the officer executing it, although it was not returned into court[23] So, where an officer attaches property on a justice's writ, and, while the case is pending on appeal in the county court, sells the property by request of the creditor, he is not a trespasser ab initio because he makes his return to the magistrate instead of to the county clerk.[24] It has been held that the failure of a sheriff to make timely return after execution of a writ of replevin does not destroy the validity of the writ ab initio, so as to render the sheriff liable in trespass for taking the property under authority of the writ.[25] A mistake or omission in return on mesne process does not render the officer liable as a trespasser ab initio.[26]

Particular process, judgments, or orders. The general rules with respect to the protection of the officer, and the exceptions to, and qualifications of, such rules, have been applied to orders for the sale of property,[27] or directing the disposition of the proceeds of sales,[28] orders for the payment of money into court,[29] orders of county authorities requiring a sheriff to open a road,[30] warrants for sale,[31] warrants of arrests,[32] writs of capias ad satisfaciendum,[33] attachments against defaulting witnesses,[34] orders for the discharge of prisoners,[35] possessory warrants,[36] search warrants,[37] distress warrants,[38] warrants for the collection of taxes,[39] writs of assistance,[40] writs of attachment,[41] writs of execution,[42] writs of possession,[43] writs of forcible entry and detainer,[44] writs of, or requisitions in, replevin,[45] writs of restitution,[46] writs of sequestration,[47] and writs of habeas corpus ad testificandum.[48]

b. Subsequent Action of Court or Party

A sheriff who executes the mandate of a writ is protected thereby regardless of the subsequent action of the court with respect to the matter.

A sheriff who executes the mandate of a writ is protected thereby regardless of the subsequent action of the court with respect to the matter.[49] Thus a sheriff is protected where he seizes goods under a valid attachment, although it is subsequently vacated.[50] The omission to take out execution on a judgment within the time during which an attachment remains effective does not render the officer who levied the attachment a trespasser ab initio,[51] and a sheriff who levies under mesne process is not deprived of protection by irregularities in the subsequent proceedings resulting in the judgment.[52] So, where a search warrant, valid at the time it was issued, has been legally executed by an officer, he is not affected by an omission of the magistrate in the subsequent proceedings in the case.[53] A sheriff is protected in enforcing a decree from which an appeal is pending where enforcement of the decree has not been stayed.[54]

Effect of supersedeas or stay. A sheriff is protected in acts done in the execution of process in his hands, although such process has been superseded, where he had no notice from the proper source of the supersedeas[55] and there is nothing on the face of the process to show such fact;[56] but he is entitled to no protection in respect of anything which he does after receiving notice of the supersedeas[57] if the notice is sufficient[58] and proceeds from the same authority as the process.[59] An officer is not protected where by his fraud a stay of proceedings is prevented.[60]

A supersedeas or stay order protects the officer from any liability for not proceeding with the process[61] if such supersedeas or order is sufficient,[62] and it has been held that the officer is protected although the stay order is issued by two justices, whereas it should have been issued by the clerk.[63] A stay order, for the purpose of protecting a sheriff, takes effect from the time of its service on him.[64]

Ultimate success of party at whose instance process issued. The right of the sheriff to protection in proper acts done in the execution of mesne process valid on its face does not depend on the ultimate success in the action of the party at whose instance the process issued,[65] and an officer is not deprived of protection in executing final process by the subsequent reversal of the judgment under which he has acted.[66] It has been held that, where, on appeal, an order vacating the attachment is reversed, the erroneous order of the lower court, vacating the attachment, is a protection to the sheriff who acted on it while it was in force,[67] but it has also been held that a constable who returns replevied property to defendant under instructions of the justice of the peace may be liable where the order of the justice of the peace is not a final judgment and is reversed on appeal.[68]

§ 123. Jurisdiction of Court

The process, order, or judgment of a court cannot protect the sheriff or constable executing it unless the court had jurisdiction of the matter.

The process, order, or judgment of a court cannot protect the sheriff or constable executing it unless the court had jurisdiction of the matter in which it acted[69] and authority to issue the process under which the officer justifies,[70] although the officer acted in good faith in proceeding under it.[71] Where the court had jurisdiction of the subject matter and the process shows apparent jurisdiction in the particular case, the officer is protected[72] if he acted in good faith,[73] although the court did not in fact acquire jurisdiction[74] or although the court

Waiver of objection to jurisdiction
A constable is not liable for seizing a motor vehicle, under the authority of a writ of replevin which by mistake has the venue laid in the wrong county, on the theory that the justice of the peace before whom the case is brought does not have jurisdiction of the person of defendant, when defendant appears in the case and impliedly waives the objection to jurisdiction.—People v. had lost jurisdiction before the process was issued.[75] It has been held that it is sufficient if the court has general jurisdiction to issue such process, even though it may not have jurisdiction in the particular case,[76] and that, where the jurisdiction of the subject matter depends on matters of fact, the existence or nonexistence of which cannot be determined from the law and which is not of public notoriety, an officer is not bound to ascertain it at his peril unless the law has clearly given him the right to demand the information and to determine the fact.[77]

Necessity of affirmative showing. Where the authority of a court to make a particular order is not appurtenant to its general jurisdiction but is derived solely from a statute which requires that certain proceedings shall be taken in order to warrant the granting of such an order, the sheriff cannot justify under an order simply directing what is to be done but must show that all proceedings were taken which the statute requires in order to give jurisdiction in the particular case,[78] but if the order recites facts showing that such proceedings were taken he may rely on such recitals as proof thereof and is justified in acting under the order, although the proceedings were never in fact taken.[79] It has also been held that, where the power of a justice of the peace to issue an order of delivery depends on the amount and the law requires the value of the property to be stated in the order, an order which does not state the value affords no protection.[80]

§ 124. Regularity of Proceedings

Defects or irregularities in the proceedings leading to the judgment, order, or process do not deprive the sheriff or constable of protection in executing the order or process.

Defects or irregularities in the proceedings leading up to a judgment or order[81] or to the issuance of process[82] do not deprive the sheriff or constable of protection in executing such process or order. A sheriff or constable is not bound to inquire into the validity of the proceedings forming the basis of the process which is placed in his hands for execution.[83]

§ 125. Validity of Judgment or Order

A sheriff or constable is not deprived of protection by reason of the fact that the order under which he acts or the judgment on which process is based is erroneous or invalid and voidable.

A sheriff or constable is not deprived of protection by reason of the fact that the order under which he acts or the judgment on which the process is based is erroneous,[84] or invalid and voidable,[85] provided, as discussed supra § 123, the court had jurisdiction of the subject matter, and the judgment or order is apparently valid.[86] It has also been held that the officer will be protected even when the judgment or order is void for any cause other than a lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter.[87] However, the sheriff or constable is not protected where the writ or the papers attached thereto give notice of the defects in the proceedings[88] where the order is void on its face[89] or where the officer has acted willfully with the intent to oppress defendant.[90]

Necessity for amendment of judgment. It has been held that a sheriff cannot justify a wrongful seizure of property under an execution in which the debtor's name is misstated until the judgment

Statute limiting force of judgment

An officer acting under a valid execution issued out of a justice court pursuant to a valid and final judgment in a forcible entry and detainer action does not act at his peril in performing his duties under the writ by virtue of statute providing that judgments either before a justice or in the district court, in actions brought under the article dealing with forcible entry and detainer, shall not be a bar to any other action brought by either party.—Schuman v. Wallace, 104 P.2d 432, 187 Okl. 535 and all the proceedings are amended in a direct action for that purpose.[91]

Judgment or order based on unconstitutional statute. A judgment or order of court will protect an officer in what he does pursuant thereto notwithstanding the statute under which the judgment was rendered or the order made is unconstitutional.[92] On the other hand, it has been held that an officer is not protected in executing process to enforce a judgment or order founded on an unconstitutional statute.[93]

Necessity for entry of order or judgment. It has been held that an action will not lie against a sheriff for the payment of money pursuant to an order for judgment before the judgment is entered unless the order is set aside;[94] but there is also authority for the view that a sheriff cannot justify under an execution which was delivered to him prior to the docketing of the judgment on which it is based,[95] although he is not deprived of protection by the fact that the execution bears a date prior to the docketing of the judgment where it was not delivered to him until after such time.[96]

§ 126. Validity of Process

It is sufficient for the protection of a sheriff or constable that the process under which he acted should be valid on its face even though the process may be in fact irregular and voidable.

It is sufficient for the protection of a sheriff or constable that the process under which he acted should be valid on its face,[97] even though the process may be in fact irregular and voidable,[98] where he acted in good faith,[99] or even where he acted collusively and in bad faith,[1] or at the interest and request of plaintiff in the writ.[2] It has been held that even though process be in fact void, if it does not on its face carry knowledge of the fact to the officer but is regular on its face, he is protected in levying thereunder.[3] The sheriff may limit his inquiry to the face of the writ[4] and is not responsible

Requirements for regularity of process

(1) All that is required to make process regular on its face, so as to protect a sheriff acting pursuant thereto, is that it must proceed from a court having jurisdiction of the subject matter and contain nothing which ought reasonably to apprise the sheriff that it was issued without authority—Robinette v. Price, 8 N.W.2d 800, 214 Minn. 521—57 C.J. p. 907 note 50 [a].

(2) A process under which a sheriff acts need not show jurisdiction of the person affected to afford the sheriff protection and justification for his acts in executing it.—Robinette v. Price, supra.

Declarations of officer

The lawfulness of a seizure of property does not depend on what the officer declared, but on the sufficiency of his authority, and hence, where the officer justifies under valid process, it is immaterial what he said at the time of the seizure.—State v. Elrod, 28 N.C. 250.

for anything of which the writ gives no notice and of which he does not have actual knowledge.[5]

A sheriff is not protected in obeying a mandate of a writ or order of court which is on its face void[6] or improper and unauthorized.[7] The process or order of court affords no protection where it shows upon its face that the court did not have jurisdiction[8] or exceeded its authority in issuing the process,[9] or where the order is made in proceedings to which the person affected and complaining was not made a party[10] Where a writ of restitution describes the land as a part of a certain tract, but fails to state what part of it, it is void for uncertainty, and will not protect an officer in evicting another under it,[11] but a writ of restitution, voidable by reason of having been issued while a motion for a new trial was pending, constitutes absolute justification to the officer.[12] Where the proceedings before a magistrate on which he issued an execution are annexed to the execution, and it is apparent from them that there is no judgment authorizing an execution, the constable who has the execution must take notice of the fact, and will be guilty of a trespass if he proceeds to make a levy under the process[13] A warrant of arrest which, after it has left the hands of the magistrate who issued it, was altered by another magistrate, who inserted the name of another person to be arrested, is no justification to the officer who executed it for taking such other person[14]

Rejection of affidavit of illegality. If a sheriff levying under a dormant judgment rejects an affidavit of illegality, he does so at his own risk and becomes liable to the injured party.[15]

Second levy. Although a sheriff or constable has levied on property sufficient to satisfy an execution, the writ protects him from liability for a second levy on other property[16]

Levy after payment of debt An officer having a valid execution in his hands and not being instructed by plaintiff to forbear is protected in levying thereunder, although the execution has been satisfied[17] and defendant exhibits to him a receipt given by plaintiff in full for the judgment debt.[18] So, where a judgment is not satisfied when execution issues, the writ, being fair on its face, protects the officer in case the judgment is afterward satisfied[19] An officer cannot be held liable for levying an attachment on a satisfied debt[20] unless there has been a discontinuance of the suit or at least notice to the sheriff of the satisfaction,[21] and a capias ad satisfaciendum, issued on a judgment which has previously been paid, will protect the officer making the arrest from liability to the debtor for false imprisonment[22]

Action after expiration of writ. A writ which under the statute remains in force for a limited time only can afford the officer no protection as to anything done after such time,[23] and a constable is not protected in executing process not properly renewed.[24]

Levy after return or return-day. A sheriff is not protected by a writ which he levies after he has returned it[25] or after the return-day.[26]

Process against two or more parties. Where an execution against two parties does not distinguish which is principal and which is surety, the sher-

§ 127. Forfeiture of Protection

a. In general
b. Wrongful acts

a. In General

A sheriff or constable who fails to perform his full duty under a process or writ may thereby forfeit all right to protection and become liable for his acts while assuming to execute it.

A sheriff or constable who fails to perform his full duty under a process or writ may thereby forfeit all right to protection and become liable for his acts while assuming to execute it.[30] It has been held that, where, in an action against a justice and a constable for false imprisonment under a warrant void because the justice was without jurisdiction to issue it, defendants answer jointly, the constable thereby puts himself on the same grounds as the justice, and it is immaterial whether the warrant could have been a protection to the constable had he defended separately.[31] On the other hand, it has been said that "the officer has not, in any case that the courts have observed, lost his justification by joining in a notice with others who could not avail themselves of the same justification."[32]

Effect of taking indemnity. The fact that an officer has taken indemnity from the persons under whose process he has acted does not deprive him of the protection which his process affords.[33]

Personal knowledge of officer. The rule of protection against liability for proper acts in the execution of process valid on its face is not affected by the personal knowledge of the officer with respect to the justice of the claim to which the process relates or the propriety of its issuance,[34] or any irregularity or fraud in the obtaining of the judgment[35] or in the judgment itself,[36] or any irregularity in the process under which he acts,[37] and a sheriff is protected in complying with an order of court which he knows was made under an error of fact.[38] It has also been held that, where the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter and the process is apparently valid, the officer is protected in executing it, although he has notice of the fact that the court did not acquire jurisdiction of defendant.[39] However, there is also authority for the view that, although process is valid on its face, an officer may be held liable for executing it where he knows that the court acted without jurisdiction[40] or that the process was issued without authority of law.[41] So also it is held that an officer selling property under the mandate of a writ of venditioni exponas is not protected thereby if he knows that the property does not belong to the party under judgment against whom it is sold.[42]

Knowledge of payment of debt. Some authorities have held that the officer is deprived of the protection afforded by process valid on its face where he knows that the debt for which the process issued has been paid,[43] but there is also authority to the contrary.[44]

b. Wrongful Acts

A process, judgment, or order of court does not protect a sheriff or constable from liability for wrongful acts committed in connection with its execution.

A process, judgment, or order of court, valid on its face, is available to the officer as a defense only, and not as a weapon of attack on the rights of third persons,[45] and cannot protect him from liability for wrongful acts which he has committed in connection with its execution,[46] as where he levies on exempt property as discussed supra § 66, or seizes property not mentioned in the process, as discussed supra § 65, or property in the possession of, or belonging to, a person other than defendant in the writ or process, as discussed supra § 68, although such process may be effective to protect him against a recovery of exemplary damages by showing that his act was not malicious.[47] So an officer seizing property in the possession of a third person under a void writ of attachment cannot, when sued for conversion, require plaintiff to prove that he was the owner of the property, in good faith and for value, plaintiff's title, whatever its origin, being good as against a wrongdoer.[48]

Where a valid writ is executed in such manner as to show a willful abuse of it, the officer and his assistants will be deemed trespassers ab initio.[49] An officer having a search warrant for a particular house cannot justify his search of another house by altering the warrant to include the house searched.[50] An attempt to make a second search on a warrant once served makes the officer a trespasser, although the warrant was originally valid.[51] However, in order to hold the officer liable as a trespasser and deprive him of the right to protection, "there must be such a departure from the line of official duty, such an active willful wrong perpetrated, as will warrant the conclusion that its perpetration was intended from the first, and that the process was used only as a cloak for illegal conduct."[52]

Process issued at instance of sheriff. The sheriff is not protected as to his acts in the execution of process where he is the moving party in causing the process to be wrongfully issued for his own sole benefit,[53] and knows that the judgment on which it is issued has been fully paid and satisfied.[54] It has been held that a sheriff is not protected in executing a warrant he procured without probable cause,[55] but there is also authority to the contrary.[56]

V. INDEMNITY TO OFFICER

§ 128. Right to Require, Time of Requirement, and Demand

a. Right to require
b. Time of requirement
c. Demand

a. Right to Require

Generally a sheriff or constable has the right to require indemnity before proceeding with the execution of a writ or as a condition of continuing to hold property on which a writ has been levied.

While a sheriff or constable ordinarily is liable for any damage resulting from his failure or neglect properly to execute process, or from his wrongful levy on, or seizure of, property not subject thereto or his wrongful release of property rightfully levied on, ordinarily he has the right, in many or most jurisdictions, under statutes granting such authority, to require indemnity, before proceeding with the execution of a writ, or as a condition of continuing to hold property on which a writ has been levied, in case he reasonably anticipates that he may subject himself to some liability by proceeding;[57] and it has been held that even in the absence of statute

Writ of assistance
Where the statute provides for requiring of indemnity before levy of execution, and where writ of assistance in mortgage foreclosure action

the same right exists,[58] at least where there is reasonable ground to doubt his authority to act in a particular case,[59] but there is also authority to the contrary.[60] In general, under such statutes, an officer is entitled to require indemnity where he has reason to believe that there is a doubt as to the title of property which he is required to seize[61] and that a controversy may arise with respect thereto,[62] or where the property is in the possession of a person other than defendant,[63] or where a third person asserts a claim to the property adverse to that of defendant,[64] or where it is claimed by defendant that the property is exempt from levy,[65] or where the officer in good faith doubts whether it is subject to levy and sale.[66] He has, however, no right to act arbitrarily or capriciously in demanding indemnity, but in order to support such a demand there must be a real and substantial reason to doubt defendant's title to the property or to apprehend that the officer may incur liability by proceeding,[67] and a fortiori the officer is not entitled to require indemnity where he would incur no liability by executing the writ according to its mandate.[68]

Under some statutes permitting a third person to file a claim to property on which a levy has been made, and authorizing the sheriff in his discretion to require indemnity from the judgment creditor, where the sheriff chooses to exercise that discretion the creditor may either furnish a bond or institute proceedings to determine the validity of the claim.[69]

Where attachment bond required. Where the statute provides for an attachment bond to protect defendant or claimants of the attached property from damage, a sheriff has been held to have no right to demand any indemnity beyond such bond as a condition of levying the attachment.[70]

Determination by sheriff's jury. Under some statutes where property levied on is claimed by a third person a sheriff is not entitled to require, nor is plaintiff bound to tender, an indemnity bond until the claim has been passed on by a sheriff's jury and determined in favor of the claimant,[71] but it has

Reliance on judgment debtor

Sheriff had right in good faith to rely on information furnished him by judgment debtor that title to property sought to be levied on was claimed by other persons, so as to justify demand by sheriff of judgment creditor for an indemnity bond before levy, and, where judgment creditor refused or failed to furnish bond, sheriff was not liable in amercement for failure to make levy. —Riddle v. Reasonable doubt

Where judgment debtor, owner of feed store, told sheriff that feed in his possession was purchased on consignment basis, which was verified by company which sold feed to judgment debtor, sheriff could reasonably entertain doubt as to title to feed, and was not liable for failure to levy in view of judgment creditor's refusal to execute demanded indemnity bond, notwithstanding other statements of judgment debtor that feed was purchased on open account, and fact that feed might have constituted goods, wares, or merchandise daily exposed to sale, in parcels in regular course of business, against which no lien could attach.—Fant Mill. Purpose of procedure

The procedure outlined by statute is designed to protect the judgment creditor, third persons with claims to the property sought to be reached, and the sheriff.—Simon v. Bailey, supra.

Fraudulent conveyances

The statute permitting a creditor to disregard a fraudulent conveyance and to attach or levy execution on the property conveyed does not give a judgment creditor the right to insist that sheriff go forward with sale under execution after claim has been filed by a third person under a chattel mortgage which judgment creditor alleges to be fraudulent, and the statute does not abrogate the rights of third persons to advance their claims or the right of the sheriff to insist on a compliance with statute authorizing him in his discretion to require indemnity from the judgment creditor, once those claims have been formally presented.—Simon v. Bailey, supra.

On decision by sheriff's jury

Under statute authorizing proceeding to try title to personalty levied on as property of judgment debtor and claimed by third person, jury, ordinarily impaneled by sheriff, must, if they find that property belongs to judgment creditor, determine value thereof and claimant's damages above value if levy is not released, and thereupon sheriff can relinquish levy unless judgment creditor gives been held that where plaintiff voluntarily executes an undertaking of indemnity without a jury having been summoned, and the sheriff thereupon seizes and holds the property, such undertaking is valid and enforceable [72]

Indemnity for expenses of suit. Where property levied on by a sheriff has been taken from him by replevin, in which he afterward obtains judgment, he has been held entitled to demand indemnity from the original plaintiff before prosecuting the sureties on the replevin bond, if necessary;[73] but there is also authority to the contrary.[74] Where a constable has delivered attached property to a bailee, a contract not under seal to indemnify the officer against the expense of a suit to recover the property from the bailee has been held void for want of consideration [75]

Indemnity on allowing claim of exemption. A sheriff has no right to demand indemnity from an execution defendant as a condition of allowing a claim of exemption.[76]

b. Time of Requirement

If doubts arise or claims are made after the property is seized, a sheriff or constable may demand indemnity before proceeding further.

The right of a sheriff or constable to be indemnified against personal liability or loss is not confined to cases where doubts arise or claims are made before a seizure, but if doubts arise or claims are made after the property is seized the officer may demand indemnity before proceeding further,[77] and a bond to indemnify him against the consequences of a levy on property is valid, although not given until after the levy has been made.[78] It has been held that even after making a sale a sheriff, on being notified of an adverse claim, may demand indemnity before paying over the proceeds to plaintiff,[79] but on this point there is also authority to the contrary.[80]

c. Demand

Ordinarily a demand for indemnity is required.

Ordinarily it is not the duty of plaintiff to tender to a sheriff or constable an indemnity bond without a request or demand therefor,[81] but it has been held that, under a statute containing no provision for notification to plaintiff or a demand on him, no demand is necessary to entitle the officer to be furnished with an indemnity in a case where he is entitled to such protection [82] A statute requiring written demand for indemnity has been held applicable in either attachments or executions.[83]

§ 129. Form, Requisites, and Sufficiency of Indemnity and Bond or Undertaking

a. In general
b. By whom given
c. Amount of indemnity
d. Validity of indemnity

a. In General

The terms and conditions of a bond for the indemnification of a sheriff or constable should comply with statutory requirements, but mere clerical errors in a bond do not affect its validity

In the absence of a statute prescribing the terms and conditions of a bond for the indemnification of a sheriff or constable, the maker of the bond can fix them.[84] There should be a compliance with statutory requirements as to the terms and conditions of such bonds;[85] but the fact that a bond contains more in the way of indemnity than the statute requires does not divest it of the character of a statutory bond,[86] and, on the other hand, a bond conditioned according to the statute to indemnify the sheriff has been held good as a statutory bond, and sufficient to protect the sheriff, although it does not contain a provision, required by the statute, for the protection of the purchaser of the property.[87] Under a statute providing that a bond in any lean undertaking to indemnify sheriff against damages in any action against sheriff because of levy, and, if undertaking is given, sheriff must retain property as belonging to judgment debtor, and if property is found to belong to judgment debtor levy is continued by sheriff and undertaking is not required.—Long Island Tinsmith Supply Corporation v. gal proceeding shall inure to the person of whom it is designed by law as security, and be subject to judgment in his favor and against the obligor the same as though it were conditioned as prescribed by law, a recovery may be had on an indemnity bond, although not conditioned according to law to meet the case presented by the facts appearing of record.[88] The failure of a bond to describe the property seized or to be seized does not render it invalid, at least where the execution creditor has not pointed out any property as that to be levied on,[89] nor is the bond invalidated by a slight inaccuracy in the description of the property to which it refers, where it is certainly identified.[90]

A bond indemnifying an officer levying an execution is a continuation of the proceedings on the execution,[91] and it is not necessary that it should set out the execution[92] or state in detail the proceedings thereunder,[93] nor is it invalidated by an imperfect recital thereof.[94] Where a partnership is plaintiff in execution the recital of the partnership named in the indemnifying bond is sufficient, without the names of the partners being set out;[95] and a bond executed by one member of the firm in the partnership name is a good bond of the person executing it.[96] Where a bond of indemnity is signed and acknowledged by three persons, it is the joint promise of all, although only two of them are named in the body of the instrument.[97]

Mere clerical errors in a bond do not affect its validity.[98]

Single indemnity on two or more writs. A sheriff or constable having in his hands two or more executions in favor of different plaintiffs against the same defendant may properly take a single indemnity bond to protect him in what is done under both or all the executions [99]

Necessity for writing. It is not necessary to the validity of an agreement by plaintiff in a writ to indemnify a sheriff or constable for proceeding therewith that it shall be in writing,[1] but, in view of the statute of frauds, a writing is necessary to the validity of such a promise by another person.[2]

Consideration. A bond given to an officer who has no right or authority to demand or take indemnity has been held to be without consideration and void,[3] and a promise to indemnify an officer is invalid for lack of consideration where it is made after the acts out of which the liability arises have been performed and the officer incurs no new liability in reliance on the promise.[4] Where, however, the officer is entitled to be indemnified, an indemnity bond is not void for want of consideration merely because it is given by a stranger to the writ [5]

Seal. Where not required by statute the bond need not be sealed[6] or accompanied by affidavits as to the financial qualifications of the sureties.[7] The fact that a bond of indemnity is sealed does not affect its validity or standing as a statutory undertaking, although the statute does not require a seal.[8]

Objections to indemnity. Under some statutes, where property seized or about to be seized by a sheriff or constable is claimed by a third person, the latter may object to the sufficiency of the indemnity given to such officer within the time specified in the statute,[9] but an order sustaining any such objections may be made only on due notice to the officer and to plaintiff in the writ, even though the statute does not expressly require notice.[10]

b. By Whom Given

A bond given to indemnify a sheriff or constable may be executed by a stranger to the writ sought to be enforced. There must be compliance with statutory requirements as to sureties.

It is not necessary to the validity of a bond given to indemnify a sheriff or constable against liability or loss that plaintiff in the writ shall be the obligor, but such a bond executed by a stranger is a good statutory bond and enforceable as such[11] It has, however, been held that an officer who is entitled to indemnity has a right to demand it from plaintiff and cannot be compelled to proceed on receiving the bond of any other person[12]

Sureties. In order to relieve a sheriff or constable from responsibility, a bond of indemnity must have such number of sureties as may be required by the statute.[13] It has been held that the officer has the right to require that the sureties shall be persons residing in his county.[14]

c. Amount of Indemnity

A sheriff or constable is not entitled to demand an indemnity bond with a penalty in excess of the sum necessary to secure him.

A sheriff or constable is not entitled to demand an indemnity bond with a penalty in excess of the sum necessary to secure him,[15] and where he wrongfully levies on property greatly in excess of the amount necessary to satisfy the writ he is not entitled to a bond for the value of the whole thereof;[16] but he is justified in refusing to accept a bond of indemnity, the penalty of which is less than the value of the property rightfully seized or to be seized[17]

d. Validity of Indemnity

An agreement to indemnify a sheriff or constable against the consequences of a willful trespass, or a bond given to indemnify him for levying under a writ which is void on its face, or a promise or undertaking to indemnify him against the consequences of a subsequent or future violation or neglect of his duty is void.

An agreement to indemnify a sheriff or constable for seizing under an execution or other writ property which is really not subject thereto is valid, where the sheriff acts in good faith, with no other view than obtaining satisfaction of the execution or obeying the mandate of the writ, and the act committed amounts simply to an unintentional wrong,[18] even though the writ is in fact invalid if it does not appear on its face to be so.[19] Similarly, an indemnity against the consequences of an illegal act previously done and not known at the time to be illegal is valid[20] An agreement to indemnify an officer against the consequences of a willful trespass, however, is void, as being against public policy,[21] as is also a bond given to indemnify him for levying under a writ which is void on its face,[22] or a promise or undertaking to indemnify him against the consequences of a subsequent or future violation or neglect of his duty,[23] and the unlawful purpose for which a bond was given may be shown, although it does not appear on the face of the instrument[24] Where there is a controversy between the owner of property taken on execution and the judgment creditor as to whether such property is exempt, an indemnity bond given by the judgment creditor to an officer to induce the sale of the property is valid, regardless of such creditor's knowledge as to whether or not the property was exempt at the time of levy or of any secret purpose he may have had in giving the bond,[25] and notwithstanding it turns out that the property was not subject to levy[26] It has been held that an indemnity bond given in a case where the officer had no right to demand it is void,[27] but there is also authority for the view that such a bond may be upheld as a common-law obligation.[28] A bond given to the sheriff to indemnify a claimant of the property levied on is not invalidated by omission of the condition prescribed by statute for indemnifying the sheriff.[29] The fact that a claim made to property seized is informal does not invalidate the bond given to indemnify the officer against such claim.[30]

§ 130. Express and Implied Promises to Furnish Indemnity

Generally, where the plaintiff in an attachment, execution, replevin, or other writ directs a sheriff or constable to serve the process in a particular manner or to seize certain designated property thereunder, the law implies a promise on his part to indemnify such officer against any liability arising out of his compliance with such directions.

While it has been held that there is no implied liability to indemnify an officer making a levy where the statute prescribes that he does so at his own risk where he does not require the execution of a bond of indemnity,[31] generally, where plaintiff in an attachment, execution, replevin, or other writ directs a sheriff or constable to serve the process in a particular manner or to seize certain designated property thereunder, the law implies a promise on his part to indemnify such officer against any liability arising out of his compliance with such directions;[32] and a similar promise has been implied on the part of an attorney who gives directions as to the execution of a writ which he has placed in the hands of the officer.[33] The officer is not, however, bound to seize property pointed out by plaintiff and to rely merely on the implied promise of indemnity arising from such action,[34] and such implied promise does not preclude him from demanding indemnity in the usual mode.[35] No promise to indemnify an officer will be implied where a process or writ is merely delivered to him for service or execution without any directions as to how he shall proceed;[36] nor can any promise of indemnity be implied, so as to give rise to a right of recovery thereon, where a bond of indemnity has been given, even though the circumstances are such that no recovery can be had on the bond.[37]

Promise to furnish indemnity. A sheriff or constable who acts in reliance on a promise to furnish him indemnity must, in executing the writ, exercise the same degree of diligence and be subject to the same liability as in ordinary cases where no bond is given.[38]

§ 131. When Indemnity Becomes Effective

A bond of indemnity to a sheriff or constable takes effect from the time of its delivery.

A bond of indemnity to a sheriff or constable takes effect from the time of its delivery.[39]

§ 132. Effect of Indemnity

The effect of a bond of indemnity given to a sheriff or constable as protection on his official bond and as giving a right of action to a claimant is discussed infra §§ 133, 134. The duty of the officer to proceed on receiving indemnity is considered infra § 135.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 133. —— As Protection for Officer and Sureties on Official Bond

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, and under statutes so providing, the taking of an indemnity bond by a sheriff or constable does not relieve him of his primary responsibility to a person injured by his acts, but under some statutes the bond is a substitute for the liability of the officer and is a bar to a suit against him.

In the absence of statute providing otherwise, the giving of an indemnity bond to a sheriff or constable merely furnishes one injured or damaged by his acts with a remedy additional or cumulative to the right of action against such officer to enforce his primary or common-law liability, and is not substitutionary therefor,[40] and under some statutes the bond or promise of indemnity does not protect the officer or the sureties on his official bond from direct and primary liability to a person or party injured by his acts,[41] but is intended to shield him from ultimate loss by enabling him to resort to the indemnity in case he is subjected to any liability,[42] which right of recourse extends to the

Constable who seized all property on leased premises under provisional seizure obtained by landlords, and who sold it after receiving affidavit of third person without requiring landlords to furnish bond for double amount of value of property claimed by third person, properly ignored affidavit of third person stating ownership of property, since act authorizing bond did not affect constable's liability—Pembrook v. sureties on the official bond of the officer.[43] Under other statutes, however, the effect of the indemnity bond is to impute to the obligors of the bond the entire responsibility which rested at the common law on the officer for an illegal levy on personal property,[44] and the bond is in substitution and bar of a suit against the officer,[45] its effect being to relieve him of all legal responsibility.[46] The sole remedy of an injured person in such case is a suit on the bond[47] unless the obligors thereon are or become insolvent[48] or unless the bond is for some reason invalid[49] or insufficient.[50] Some of these latter statutes are by their terms applicable only to cases of bonds taken as indemnity for making sales under execution,[51] and do not protect the officer from suit where the bond is taken in a replevin action[52] or where the bond is taken in attachment proceedings.[53]

In order to bar action against the officer the bond must conform strictly to the statute,[54] must have been taken before the action is commenced,[55] and, where its return is required by statute, must have been returned.[56] Where an officer is not entitled to demand a bond in a particular case, a bond actually given, even though valid as a common-law obligation, does not relieve him from his primary liability to one injured or damaged by his acts.[57]

§ 134. —— As Giving Right of Action to Claimant

The owner or claimant of property improperly seized or levied on by a sheriff or constable has no right of action against the officer's indemnitors on the bond as such unless he is named in the bond or a statute provides that it shall be for his benefit.

Except where the bond names him, or a statute provides that it shall be for his benefit, the owner or claimant of property improperly seized or levied on by a sheriff or constable has no right of action against the officer's indemnitors on the bond as such;[58] but he may, in the case of a bond indemnifying against a levy on or sale of such particular property, maintain an action for his loss or damage against them as trespassers or against persons authorizing and responsible for the wrongful taking by the officer.[59] A bond given for the indemnity of a particular claimant, however, becomes inoperative when he withdraws his claim, and it does not give one subsequently asserting a claim any right of action.[60] Where a bond is given to the sheriff or his assigns, a claimant assignee of the sheriff may have a right of action on the bond.[61]

§ 135. —— Duty of Officer to Proceed on Receiving Indemnity

Generally, where proper indemnity is given, it is the duty of a sheriff or constable to proceed under the process, but this duty is not mandatory unless made so by statute.

Under some statutes so providing, it is the duty of a sheriff or constable to whom proper indemnity has been given or promised to proceed under the process in his hands,[62] and he must levy on the property,[63] or, if a levy thereon has already been made, hold[64] and sell[65] it, and he cannot escape liability for releasing property levied on or by refusing to proceed by showing that the title was actually not in defendant but in another.[66] Unless the absolute duty to proceed is so imposed by statute, however, an officer may decline to proceed notwithstanding indemnity is furnished him,[67] and may justify his refusal by showing that the property did not belong to defendant or was not subject to levy.[68] The burden of proof in such case is on him,[69] and if he fails to make out his justification he is liable to plaintiff for not executing the writ.[70] An indemnity bond given by plaintiff against a claim of ownership made by a third person does not impose on the sheriff any duty to withhold the property from defendant on a claim of exemption made by him.[71]

Where indemnity defective. Where a sheriff or constable has a right to be indemnified against personal loss or liability, he is entitled to an indemnity bond which needs no explanations and is on its face subject to no objections,[72] and he is justified in refusing to act where the bond furnished him is defective.[73]

§ 136. Effect of Refusal to Furnish Indemnity

A sheriff or constable who has a right to indemnity may refuse to proceed further where his request or demand for indemnity is refused.

Where a sheriff or constable is entitled to receive indemnity, and plaintiff refuses or neglects, after proper demand has been made on him, to furnish a proper bond, the officer may rightfully refuse to execute the writ[74] or make a levy,[75] or, if a levy has already been made, he may refuse to proceed to a sale,[76] and may release the property,[77] or the court will on his own application enlarge the time to make his return.[78] In the case of conflicting claims to money collected on execution, the refusal of the execution creditor to give the officer a bond of indemnity may excuse the officer for retaining the money until the question of title is decided.[79] Where, however, in a particular case an officer has no right to be indemnified, he cannot refuse to act, or release property seized, because such indemnity is not given.[80]

Refusal by one of two or more creditors. Where a sheriff or constable is entitled to indemnity, and there are two or more creditors, one or some of whom fail or refuse to furnish indemnity after proper demand is made therefor, the officer, without acting further in behalf of the latter, may proceed to make a levy and sell the property on the writs of the one or ones who comply with such demand.[81]

§ 137. Liabilities of Indemnitors

The liability of the obligors on a bond of indemnity given to a sheriff or constable is measured by the terms of the contract of indemnity contained therein, as construed in the light of the statute providing therefor.

Purpose of statute
One of main purposes of statute providing for release of property levied on under execution, if plaintiff fails to give sheriff undertaking to indemnify third person filing claim thereto, and declaring sheriff not liable for damages to third person filing no claim, is to protect officer making levy from claims for damages by third persons.—Sunset Realty Co. v. The liability of the obligors on a bond of indemnity given to a sheriff or constable is measured by the terms of the contract of indemnity contained therein,[82] as construed in the light of the statute providing therefor,[83] but the bond extends to all acts reasonably within its terms,[84] and the right of an officer to resort to a bond given to protect him in the execution of a writ is not affected by the fact that an alias writ was necessary to be, and was, issued in order to make the levy and sale.[85] When a bond of indemnity can reasonably be construed otherwise, however, a construction will not be given to it which will make the obligors liable to the officer for the consequences of a trespass or other wrongful act committed by him or his agent or deputy which they neither directed nor authorized.[86] Similarly, the obligors on a bond given to a sheriff to indemnify him against any levy on property of a third person cannot be held liable for a levy on property of the judgment debtor which was exempt from execution,[87] and the obligors on a bond conditioned to secure an officer harmless for levying on goods which he or they may judge to belong to the debtor are not liable for the act of the officer in seizing goods conceded to belong to a third person[88] except where they have expressly or impliedly authorized or ratified such act.[89] The liability of the indemnitors includes damages resulting from a wrongful levy even though the property levied on is afterward sold under another writ.[90] Where an officer acting under two indemnity bonds from different parties is damaged by making a levy, he may resort for compensation to either or both of the parties, and, if he bring action against one and recover only a part of his damages, he may then institute action on the other bond for the balance.[91]

Exemplary damages may not be recovered from indemnitors by the claimant of the property levied on where there was no fraud or malice in the levy.[92]

Acts done before execution of bond. A bond of indemnity to a sheriff or constable will apply to, and protect the officer from, the consequences of acts done before its execution where by a fair construction its terms are applicable thereto,[93] but not otherwise.[94]

Liability of claimant on indemnity bonds. Where claimant of property levied on under execution has possession of it, and refuses to deliver it to the sheriff, and gives a bond of indemnity to the sheriff for not assessing and selling it, he is liable to the sheriff on such bond.[95]

Ordinarily the liability of the obligors on a bond of indemnity given to a sheriff or constable is limited to the penal sum named in the bond, but they may be liable as joint trespassers with the officer

The liability of the obligors on a bond of indemnity given to a sheriff or constable ordinarily is limited to the penal sum named in the bond,[96] together with interest on such amount,[97] which runs, however, only from the time of the breach;[98] but in the case of a wrongful levy under such circumstances as to make them joint trespassers with the officer they are liable for the full amount of the damage or injury sustained, and not merely for the amount specified in the bond.[99] Subject to the rule just stated, such indemnitors are liable to the officer for the amount of a judgment rendered against him in any action based on the act to which the indemnity relates,[1] together with reasonable counsel fees, costs, and expenses incurred by him in the defense of such action,[2] or for the amount of a compromise made by him in good faith after unsuccessfully endeavoring to compel the indemnitors to defend the action;[3] and their liability is not affected by any considerations as to whether or not the officer is solvent or actually able to pay the judgment against him.[4] Such liability does not extend, however, to the officer's costs or disbursements in the action in which the process was issued,[5] and does not cover expenses incurred in the employment of a watchman or guard[6] or for insurance on the property levied on;[7] nor does it extend to attorney's fees or costs in a suit on the indemnity bond[8] except where the bond provides otherwise.[9]

Indemnitors of an officer against whom judgment is rendered in an action for conversion cannot require him to pay such judgment and, for the purpose of fixing the amount for which they are liable, to deduct the value of the property converted, their obligation being to protect him from such judgment by paying it, and to take the property.[10] Where property is wrongfully sold for an amount greater than that needed to satisfy the writ, the officer's indemnitors are liable not merely for the amount of the execution but for the entire damage sustained in consequence of the seizure and sale.[11] The indemnitors of an officer levying on money are liable for interest thereon required to be paid by him to the rightful owner thereof;[12] but a bond given to indemnify a sheriff attaching money will not support a recovery by the attachment defendant, to whom the officer has assigned the bond, for the loss of interest on the money attached.[13]

An attachment plaintiff who, at his own request, is appointed custodian of attached property cannot reduce his liability on a bond of indemnity given by him to the officer by the amount of a loss due to damage sustained by the goods while in his custody and through his negligence;[14] but the liability of the surety on the bond may be thereby reduced.[15]

Exemplary damages. An officer who is not liable for exemplary damages for wrongful or improper acts in connection with the execution of process is entitled to no more than compensatory damages from his indemnitors;[16] and where an officer is subjected to exemplary damages for acts outside the line of his duty as such officer his indemnitors are not liable therefor on their bond unless they participated in such acts.[17]

In action by injured person against indemnitors they are liable only for such damages as plaintiff could recover from the officer if there were no bond.[18]

§ 139. —— When Liability Accrues

The terms of the undertaking given a sheriff or constable generally determine when the indemnitors become liable.

Where the covenant or undertaking, in a bond of indemnity to a sheriff or constable, is in general terms to protect the officer from liability or judgments, a cause of action against the indemnitors accrues when judgment is rendered against him, even though it has not been paid;[19] and where a liability of the officer becomes fixed otherwise than by judgment the officer may resort to his indemnity before paying out his own money to discharge such liability.[20] Where, however, the undertaking is to save the officer harmless from damage or expense, his cause of action does not accrue until he has been compelled to pay out something because of the acts as to which he has been indemnified [21]

Implied indemnity. An officer relying on an implied indemnity has no cause of action until he has suffered actual damage by being compelled to pay over something.[22]

§ 140. —— Conclusiveness on Indemnitors of Judgment against Officer

Generally a judgment against the sheriff or constable is conclusive as against his indemnitors unless it resulted from fraud or collusion or unless the indemnitors were not given necessary notice of the suit.

Where a sheriff or constable has given his indemnitors notice of the institution or pendency of an action against him based on the matters to which the indemnity relates, so as to afford them an opportunity to come in and defend or aid in the defense, a judgment against the officer is conclusive, as between him and the indemnitors, on the question of his liability;[23] and there is authority for the view that, where the indemnity is against judgments, a judgment against the officer is conclusive against the indemnitors even though they had no notice of the action against the officer[24] unless such judgment was obtained through fraud or collusion[25] or the officer refused to permit the indemnitors to make or aid in the defense.[26] Ordinarily, however, it is held that in the absence of notice to the indemnitors a judgment against the officer is not conclusive on them,[27] although it is prima facie evidence of the officer's liability [28] Indemnitors may show that a judgment against an officer is founded on the levy of other or prior writs than that to which their bond relates.[29]

§ 141. —— Estoppel to Deny Ownership of Property

Indemnitors of a sheriff or constable may be estopped to deny that the debtor was the owner of the property seized.

Where indemnitors of a sheriff or constable are plaintiffs in the writ and have directed a levy on, and sale of, property thereunder, they are estopped, in an action on the bond of indemnity, to deny that the debtor was the owner of the property.[30]

§ 142. —— Liability as Affected by Disposition of Proceeds of Property

The liability of the indemnitor of a sheriff or constable may depend on the disposition of the proceeds of the sale of the property seized.

Where an execution plaintiff has indemnified a sheriff or constable for a sale of property levied on, which is accordingly sold, it is not essential to the officer's right to resort to his indemnity that he should have paid over the proceeds of the sale to such plaintiff or to the court which issued the writ.[31] According to some authorities, where property has been seized under writs issued by two or more different persons, each of whom has given indemnity to the officer, the liability of each indemnitor is limited to the extent of his participation in the distribution of the proceeds of the property,[32] and, similarly, where one of two or more seizing creditors gives indemnity and part of the property is applied to the satisfaction of writs levied before that to which the indemnity relates, the indemnitors are liable only to the extent of what remains after such payments,[33] or, if all the property goes to satisfy writs entitled to priority, the indemnitors whose indemnity relates to the writ on which nothing was paid are not liable to the officer for the damage which he has sustained by reason of the seizure.[34] According to other authorities, however, it has been held that the fact that a portion of the proceeds of an execution sale accrued to the benefit of creditors other than the one who indemnified the officer does not affect the liability on the indemnity bond,[35] and that the indemnitors may be held liable, although all the property seized was applied on writs prior to that to which the indemnity relates [36] Similarly, where two or more creditors suing together have given a joint indemnity bond, it has been held that the full amount of damages resulting to the officer may be adjudged against both or all, and not merely prorated between or among them in proportion to the amount received by each out of the proceeds of the property.[37] A fortiori, the liability of an indemnifying creditor whose claim has been satisfied in full is not avoided or reduced by the fact that the surplus proceeds of the property have been applied to the claims of other creditors who had given no indemnity.[38]

§ 143. —— Release or Discharge of Liability

An indemnitor may be released or discharged from liability by acts or omissions of the officer which increase the indemnitor's risk or liability, or otherwise injure his rights or remedies.

An indemnitor of a sheriff or constable is released and discharged from liability on his bond of indemnity by a failure on the part of the officer to use due diligence in executing the process[39] or making return,[40] or by any act or omission by such officer which increases the indemnitor's risk or liability or otherwise injures his rights or remedies,[41] but not by any act or omission which involves no violation of the officer's duties or does not increase the risk or liability of the indemnitor.[42]

Irregularities in process. Indemnitors cannot escape liability to the officer by showing that there were irregularities in the process to which the indemnity related.[43]

Judgment against indemnitor as trespasser. The rendition of judgment against an indemnitor as a trespasser with the officer in making a wrongful levy does not reduce or discharge his liability to the officer on the indemnity bond.[44]

Covenant not to sue. An officer cannot, by a covenant not to sue the sureties on an indemnity bond, exempt them from liability to the owner of property wrongfully seized.[45]

Discharge in bankruptcy. The contingent liability of the principal in an indemnity bond is not affected by his discharge in bankruptcy before the actual liability has accrued.[46]

Cancellation of bond. The fact that a suit in which an attachment was issued has been discontinued will not justify the cancellation of an indemnity bond given by the attaching creditor, where the property attached is claimed by a third person and the rights of the latter against the officer have not been determined,[47] and even though an officer has taken nothing under the writ of attachment with respect to which a bond of indemnity was given, and has sold all defendants' property under a judgment in another action, the court will not cancel the bond until the time limited by statute for bringing action against the sheriff has expired[48]

Cessation of officer's liability. When the liability of an officer ceases the liability of his indemnitors ceases also[49]

§ 144. Summary Remedies of Officers against Indemnitors

Under statutes so providing, a sheriff or constable may resort to summary remedies in order to recover from his indemnitor.

Under statutes so providing, a sheriff or constable is entitled to recover judgment on motion against his indemnitors if a judgment is rendered against him because of the act or acts to which the indemnity relates,[50] provided he has given the indemnitors notice of the action against him[51] and of the motion for judgment over against them[52] Such a statute is not to be rigidly construed against the officer and in favor of the obligors,[53] but it cannot apply to cases not falling within its terms[54] On a motion for judgment over on the bond, the officer makes a prima facie showing by the production of the bond and the judgment against him and proof of notice to the indemnitors to appear and defend the action,[55] and the burden is on the indemnitors to show that the judgment against the officer has been satisfied by themselves, or by a return of the property seized, or that the property to satisfy it still is, or ought to be, in the officer's possession.[56] A statute providing for judgment over against the indemnitors does not require a joint judgment, if the indemnitors' bond is several, and for different amounts or forbid a judgment for less than that against the officer, if the indemnitors are bound for less, but in such case judgment should be entered against the indemnitors for the amount of the bond, and for which each has bound himself, not to exceed the judgment against the officer, and costs.[57] Failure of the court to give the indemnitors the notice provided for by statute before entering judgment over against them has been held a mere irregularity.[58]

§ 145. Actions by Officers against Indemnitors

a. In general
b. Defenses
c. Parties, pleading, and evidence
d. Trial, judgment, and costs

a. In General

A sheriff or constable, a deputy sheriff in a proper case, or the sureties of an officer, may maintain an action ex contractu against his indemnitors.

A sheriff or constable who has suffered injury or loss through an act as to which he has been indemnified has a right of action on the bond of indemnity for reimbursement.[59] An officer's failure to give his indemnitors notice of an action against him does not preclude an action by him against the indemnitors on the bond,[60] since such omission affects merely the conclusiveness as against the indemnitors of the judgment rendered in such action against him,[61] nor will his failure to notify his indemnitors of his payment of a judgment against him, before commencing an action against them, preclude a recovery therein.[62]

Actions by deputies. Action may be maintained by a deputy sheriff or deputy constable in his own name on a bond of indemnity given to him as such deputy.[63]

Actions by sureties of officer. A surety on the official bond of a sheriff or constable who has been compelled to pay out money on account of an act of the officer, as to which he was indemnified, may maintain an action against the indemnitors on their bond of indemnity.[64]

Conditions precedent. Unless provided otherwise by the terms of a bond of indemnity given to a sheriff or constable, a demand on the indemnitors is not a condition precedent to the institution of an action on the bond;[65] nor is it necessary that the officer shall appeal from a judgment rendered against him as to the matter to which the indemnity relates, before proceeding on the bond.[66]

Nature of action. An action on a bond given to indemnify a sheriff or constable against the consequences of a levy under process is ex contractu.[67]

Joinder of actions. It has been held that a sheriff or constable may maintain one action on two or more bonds given to indemnify him on proceeding with a sale of property levied on under execution, so that the court may apportion the liability of each bond, and of the several sureties thereon;[68] but there is also authority for the view that, where each two plaintiffs executes a bond to an officer to indemnify him for attaching the same property, he must sue separately on each bond.[69] Where a promise of indemnity made by one person is adopted and ratified by another, both may be sued jointly thereon.[70]

b. Defenses

In an action on a bond given to indemnify a sheriff or constable, the obligors may make any defense which defeats their liability thereon, and as a general rule they may assert any defense which could have been made by the officer in the suit wherein liability was imposed on him.

It is a good defense to an action by a sheriff or constable on an indemnity bond that the judgment on which the action is based was obtained through fraud[71] or collusion,[72] or that the action was not properly defended,[73] or, where the action is founded on a liability incurred by levying on exempt property, that the officer refused to restore such property to the debtor at the creditor's direction;[74] and in general the obligors on the bond may make any defense, in an action thereon, which could have been made by the officer in the suit wherein liability was imposed on him.[75] While the language of the bond may estop defendant to deny that the officer made an attachment at his request,[76] he is not estopped to set up that the officer willfully exceeded his authority and defendant's directions.[77] The validity of a bond of indemnity cannot be attacked on the ground of duress,[78] or because of a variance in the description of the property, where it is otherwise described in the bond the same as in the officer's return, and the evidence shows that the property taken was that for which the bond was given,[79] or because the statement of claim omits some material matter, if the bond was given by the execution plaintiff without objection on the demand of the officer.[80] Matters not affecting the liability of the officer or increasing the risks of the indemnitors are no defense to an action on the bond.[81]

Limitations. It has been held that the statute of limitations does not begin to run against an action on a bond of indemnity for the amount paid out by a sheriff or constable on a judgment against him until the time of such payment.[82]

c. Parties, Pleading, and Evidence

General rules apply as to parties, pleading, and evidence in an action to enforce liability on an indemnity bond given a sheriff or constable.

An action on a bond of indemnity of which a sheriff or constable is obligee is properly brought in the name of such officer, even though the bond was given for the benefit of his deputy,[83] and, under a bond of indemnity to an officer and all persons assisting him in the execution of a writ, action lies against the indemnitors in the name of such officer for damage or loss sustained by his deputy, without an assignment by the latter of the cause of action.[84] Where it clearly appears from a bond that a particular officer is the person beneficially interested thereunder, action thereon may be brought by him notwithstanding the erroneous insertion of names of other persons as obligees[85]

Pleading. The rules relating to pleadings in civil actions generally are applicable, in an action by a sheriff or constable on a bond of indemnity given to him, as to the propriety and sufficiency of the declaration or complaint,[86] motion or demurrer,[87] and plea or answer.[88] In an action by a sheriff or constable on an indemnity bond to recover the amount of a judgment rendered against him in a suit by a party claiming the property levied on, the only issue is whether the judgment is included in the terms of the bond;[89] and the merits of the action in which such judgment was rendered[90] or the legality or propriety of the act on which it was founded[91] cannot be inquired into unless an issue of fraud or collusion in such judgment is raised[92] The admission of evidence tending to show a release of the indemnitors, where release has not been pleaded, does not affect the propriety or validity of a judgmnt for the officer.[93] There is no material variance between an allegation that the officer paid the judgment against him and proof that it was paid through him by one of the sureties on his official bond.[94]

Evidence As in civil actions generally, the burden of proof rests on the party having the affirmative of the issues,[95] and the general rules of evidence as to the admissibility[96] and sufficiency[97] of evidence in civil actions are applicable to an action on a bond of indemnity to a sheriff or constable. Where the bond is to indemnify the officer for selling under a particular execution, he must show that he sold under the execution mentioned in the bond in order to recover thereon.[98]

d. Trial, Judgment, and Costs

Actions by sheriffs and constables against their indemnitors are controlled by the general rules governing trial, judgments, and costs in civil actions.

In an action by a sheriff or constable on a bond of indemnity, it is within the discretion of the court to refuse to permit the sureties on such bond to file, during the trial, a plea setting up a release to themselves from liability thereon.[99] Whether the judgment against the officer, on which the action for indemnity is founded, was fraudulent or collusive is a question for the jury.[1] In an action of this character, proper instructions must be given,[2] on request therefor duly made;[3] but an instruction on a question not in issue,[4] or an instruction which is partly or wholly erroneous or misleading,[5] is properly refused. Where there is a disputed question of fact, refusal of a directed verdict is proper.[6]

Judgment. Subject to the ordinary rules relative to judgments by default, judgment may be entered against defendant in an action by a sheriff or constable on a bond of indemnity, in case of his failure to answer at a proper time.[7]

Costs. Where, on default of defendant in an action by a sheriff or constable on an indemnity bond, a referee has been appointed to assess the sheriff's damages, but the default is subsequently opened by an order which does not tax the fees of the referee, such fees are a proper item of disbursement to be taxed in the costs on final judgment for the officer.[8]

VI. ACTIONS AGAINST OFFICERS OR INDEMNITORS

§ 146. Right of Action

- a. In general
- b. Act or default of officer
- c Act or default of deputy
- d. Duty or obligation of defendant to plaintiff
- e. Matters affecting right of action

a. In General

A civil action against a sheriff or constable, or his indemnitors, for his default or wrongful act may be brought by, and only by, a person who has sustained some injury through the act or default of the officer and who has a sufficient title or interest to sue.

A civil action against a sheriff or constable for his default or wrongful act may be brought by, and only by, a person who has a sufficient title or interest to sue,[9] and has not estopped or precluded himself from bringing suit, as discussed infra subsection f of this section. Also, where an indemnity bond has been given, a suit thereon may be brought by a person other than the officer, his deputy or surety, when, and only when, the bond was given for the benefit and protection of the owner or a claimant of the property involved, as discussed supra § 134, and he has a sufficient title or interest on which to base his right to sue.[10]

Injury to plaintiff. In order to support a civil action against a sheriff or constable, it is ordinarily necessary that plaintiff shall have sustained some injury through the act or default of the officer,[11] and that the injury suffered shall have been the legal and natural consequence of the default or misconduct of which complaint is made,[12] and not the result of the negligence of the complaining party.[13] However, where a statute imposes an absolute liability on an officer as a consequence of an official default, damage to plaintiff is not necessary to support an action against the officer;[14] and where, under statutory authority, an action on a bond of indemnity is prosecuted by a claimant of property in the name of the sheriff or other officer to whom the bond was given, it need not appear that any damage was sustained by such officer.[15]

b. Act or Default of Officer

A civil action may be brought against a sheriff for any official default or misconduct on his part which caused injury.

A civil action may be brought against a sheriff for any official default or misconduct on his part which caused injury,[16] such as failure to execute process[17] by levy,[18] releasing property levied on,[19] failure to sell property levied on,[20] levying on[21] and selling[22] exempt property, seizing or levying on[23] and selling[24] property not belonging to defendant in the process, seizing property in the custody of the law,[25] selling property attached on mesne process without the consent of the creditor and owner,[26] or otherwise than by the mode prescribed by statute,[27] failure to collect money,[28] failure or refusal to pay over money collected by him[29] or in his official custody,[30] loss of property in his official custody[31] or negligently permitting it to be damaged,[32] misapplying the proceeds of a sale,[33] failure to return process,[34] making a false return,[35] or permitting an escape of a person arrested under civil process.[36] On the other hand, it has been held that an action at law may not be brought against a sheriff for performing his duty under a fieri facias which is legal on its face.[37]

c. Act or Default of Deputy

An action is properly brought against the sheriff for the default of his deputy and it has been held, although there is authority to the contrary, that no action lies against the deputy therefor.

Under the rule that the official default of a deputy is chargeable to the sheriff, as discussed supra § 55, an action is properly brought against the sheriff for such default,[38] and it has been held that no action lies against the deputy therefor,[39] although in some jurisdictions it has been held that an action may be brought against either the sheriff or the deputy.[40] However, it has been held that an action will lie against the deputy for his negligence,[41] or for a breach of his direct promise to the person suing,[42]

or for active malfeasance,[43] since such an action is against him as a wrongdoer[44] and not in his capacity of deputy[45]

d. Duty or Obligation of Defendant to Plaintiff

In order to support an action against a sheriff or constable for an official default, as distinguished from active misconduct in the nature of a trespass, it must appear that the sheriff or constable officially owes some duty to the plaintiff. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a suit on an indemnity bond may not be maintained by a person other than the sheriff or his deputy or surety, where the bond is conditioned to indemnify the sheriff.

In order to support an action against a sheriff or constable for an official default, as distinguished from active misconduct in the nature of a trespass, it must appear that the sheriff or constable officially owes some duty, or is under some obligation, to plaintiff.[46] An action for damages will not lie against a sheriff and his bondsmen, for alleged failure of the sheriff to serve a process or make a levy, in favor of a person not a party to such proceeding calling for an exercise of such duty.[47] A suit on an indemnity bond may not be maintained by a person other than the sheriff or his deputy or surety, where the bond runs to, and is conditioned to indemnify, the sheriff only,[48] and there is no statute authorizing another person to sue on the bond.[49] According to some statutes, and the construction placed thereon, the right of action against indemnitors of the sheriff is confined to claimants who gave notice to the sheriff of their claims, and with respect to whose claims the bond was given,[50] and other claimants are left to their remedy by a common-law action against the sheriff.[51]

e. Matters Affecting Right of Action

(1) Against officer
(2) Against indemnitors

(1) Against Officer

An action may be maintained against an officer, even though his acts up to the time of the commencement of the action were regular and legal, where thereafter and before trial he is guilty of acts which render him a trespasser ab initio, and ordinarily a person is not precluded from bringing an action by the mere fact that another remedy is, or was, available, but it has been held that a person who has ratified the officer's acts may not maintain an action based thereon.

An action may be maintained against a levying officer notwithstanding his proceedings up to the time of the commencement of the action were regular and legal, where after such time and before the trial he is guilty of acts which render him a trespasser ab initio[52] A person is not precluded from bringing an ordinary civil action against a sheriff or constable by the mere fact that another remedy is, or previously was, open and available to him[53] An action of tort against an officer for taking property from plaintiff by virtue of a writ of replevin in which the bond was defective is not defeated by proof that plaintiff in replevin became nonsuit, and the present plaintiff had judgment therein for damages and a return of the goods, if in fact that judgment remains unsatisfied and the goods have not been returned.[54] Where an officer sells goods taken on a void execution after having been notified by a creditor, who has placed in his hands another execution against the same debtor, that he claims the first execution to be void, and that, if the officer sells the goods under it, so that they cannot be taken on his execution, he will hold him responsible therefor, such creditor does not

Ascertainment of interest of claimant in equity
An action against sheriff to recover a share of foreclosure sale bid, which was not collected from bidder, was not maintainable on ground that plaintiff's intestate and bidder at foreclosure sale were joint owners of the mortgage under foreclosure, where there was evidence of a partnership or at least a joint adventure between intestate and bidder and bidder was claiming ownership of the mortgage, since the remedy was in equity to establish plaintiff's ownership of an interest in the mortgage —Morgan v Van Meter, 31 A.2d 767, 130 N J Law 78.

by purchasing the goods at the sale and receiving possession of them become estopped from maintaining an action against the officer.[55] The fact that a person received the chattels in question as a bailee from the purchaser at the execution sale does not preclude him from recovering their value from the sheriff who wrongfully seized them under an execution against another person.[56] Also, the right to recover for property seized on execution against another person is not affected by the fact that a third person made a claim to the sheriff for property which included that in question, where there is nothing to show that plaintiff knew of, or acquiesced in, such claim,[57] and it has been held that the fact that an attaching creditor, after the release under bond of the property seized under his writ of attachment, was thereafter appointed keeper of the same property when it was attached by another, without protest at that time that his attachment had been improperly released, does not estop him from thereafter attacking the release of his attachment without proper bond.[58] On the other hand, it has been held that a person who has ratified the acts of a sheriff with respect to the disposal of property levied on cannot thereafter maintain an action against him because of such acts;[59] where a party proceeds by attachment, and receives the principal of the debt, he cannot afterward sue the sheriff for damages for the detention thereof;[60] a person who has failed to appeal from a dismissal of his claim may not maintain trover against the sheriff;[61] and after a judgment against a deputy in trespass de bonis asportatis, and execution levied on the body of the deputy, but not satisfied, no action lies against the sheriff for the same cause.[62]

Court's exoneration and release of sheriff from accountability to it do not release or protect him from liability to third persons.[63]

(2) Against Indemnitors

An action may not be maintained against the indemnitors of the sheriff, unless an action could have been maintained against the sheriff for the act complained of if no indemnity had been given, and various other matters have been held to affect or not to affect an action against the indemnitors.

An action cannot be maintained against indemnitors of the sheriff, unless an action could have been maintained against the sheriff for the act complained of if no indemnity had been given.[64] The right of a judgment debtor to sue on a bond of indemnity for the seizure and sale of exempt property is not affected by his failure to give the sheriff notice of his claim of exemption,[65] and the fact that claimant has executed a bond to retain possession of the property will not prevent his instituting an action on the indemnity bond for the damages previously sustained.[66] It has been held that a person is not deprived of his right of action on an indemnifying bond executed to the officer because the officer has rendered himself liable by failure to return the indemnifying bond,[67] but there is also authority to the contrary.[68] Where two indemnity bonds have been given by different execution creditors, and the surplus of the proceeds of the execution sale, remaining after satisfying one execution, have been paid by the sheriff to the other execution creditor, the facts that a claimant brought an action on the bond given by the former execution creditor and recovered for the amount of the goods applied to his execution do not bar him from bringing an action on the bond given by the other execution creditor.[69]

§ 147. Nature and Form of Remedy

A sheriff who has wrongfully seized property may be sued therefor in any appropriate form of action, and, where a sheriff permits property he has seized to be wrongfully used or makes a false return, the remedy of the injured person is an ordinary civil action.

A sheriff, who has wrongfully seized property may be sued therefor in any appropriate form of action the aggrieved party may elect to pursue.[70] Where a sheriff permits property he has seized to be wrongfully used, the remedy of the injured

person is an ordinary civil action.[71] Likewise, where a sheriff makes a false return, the remedy of the injured person is an action for damages against the officer,[72] and not a motion to set aside the return.[73] Where a sheriff returns an execution nulla bona, and refuses to pay over money collected on it, the action must be for a false return.[74] It has been held that an action against a sheriff for an unauthorized release of attached property is in tort.[75]

Accounting. A suit in equity for an accounting may be maintained against a sheriff, his estate, and indemnitors where appropriate grounds of equity jurisdiction are shown to exist.[76]

Assumpsit. Assumpsit is a proper form of action against a sheriff who has failed or refused to pay over to the person entitled thereto money collected by him[77] or by his deputy,[78] or has paid money in his hands to a person other than the one really entitled thereto,[79] and, if the officer selling property at an official sale delivered it to the purchaser without collecting the purchase money, the person entitled to the proceeds of the sale may recover the amount in an action of assumpsit.[80] It has also been held that a person who is injured by the misconduct of an officer may waive the tort and recover by an action of assumpsit any money in the hands of the tort-feasor as the fruits derived from the wrongful act.[81] So, also, where an officer failed to execute and return a writ which had been renewed on his agreement to be responsible therefor, the remedy is by assumpsit on his promise.[82]

Book account. An action of book account does not lie against an officer for money which he has failed to collect.[83]

Case. An action on the case is a proper remedy to enforce the liability of a sheriff for failure to execute process,[84] permitting the escape of a debtor arrested on civil process,[85] failure to set aside to the debtor goods exempt from execution,[86] selling property claimed as exempt,[87] making a false[88] or improper[89] return, making an excessive levy,[90] selling property levied on at a place other than one of those authorized by the statute,[91] neglect to take proper care of property seized by him under process,[92] refusing to take bail from a debtor arrested on mesne process,[93] disregarding a proper notice of labor claims when he has in his hands funds derived from the master's property,[94] failure to take security,[95] taking insufficient security,[96] failure to pay over money collected,[97] or seizing property under an execution on a judgment procured by fraud to which the officer was a party.[98] However, case is not a proper remedy against a sheriff for levying an execution after the return day,[99] or selling property levied on without giving the proper notice.[1] Ordinarily, an action on the case is a proper form of remedy to enforce the liability of a sheriff for failure to return process;[2] but, where an original execution has been renewed on a constable's responsibility and on good consideration, case is not the proper form of action against him for not returning it.[3]

The common-law right of suing in case is not taken away by a statute permitting an action of debt for the same cause.[4]

Where process was issued by competent authority, was regular on its face, and was executed by an officer according to its mandate, case for malicious motive on his part is the only remedy available against him.[5]

Debt. At least where it is so provided by statute, an action of debt is a proper remedy against a sheriff who has failed to execute[6] or return[7] process, received depreciated currency in satisfaction of an execution,[8] failed to pay over money collected,[9] or failed without legal excuse to apply property levied on under an execution to the satisfaction of it.[10]

While debt did not lie at common law against an officer for the escape of a prisoner,[11] this remedy was by statute in early times extended to an escape on execution and has been so applied in this country,[12] although its application has been denied for an escape on mesne process.[13]

Trespass Trespass is a proper form of remedy to enforce the liability of a sheriff or his indemnitors for a wrongful seizure[14] and sale[15] of property not belonging to defendant in the process, levying on property which is exempt under the statute,[16] or on which, under the circumstances, a levy was not authorized,[17] selling property claimed as exempt,[18] levying an execution after the return day,[19] selling, under a levari facias, grain growing on mortgaged premises,[20] selling property levied on without giving the proper notice,[21] delivering property seized under a writ of replevin to plaintiff therein without requiring a sufficient bond,[22] or an injury done by his deputy to the person or property of another [23] On the other hand, trespass is not a proper form of action to enforce a sheriff's liability for making an excessive levy,[24] seizure of property under an execution on a judgment procured by fraud to which the officer was a party,[25] refusing to permit an attachment defendant to replevy the property on a valid and sufficient bond,[26] taking property out of the custody of defendant in replevin on an insufficient replevin bond,[27] selling property levied on at a place other than one of those authorized by statute,[28] taking the goods of the execution defendant without an auction sale, on defendant's consent,[29] misapplication of the proceeds of a sale of property levied on,[30] making an improper return,[31] or refusing to take bail from a debtor arrested on mesne process,[32] and, where a writ was issued by competent authority and was regular on its face, an officer cannot be held liable in trespass for executing it according to its mandate,[33] even though he acted maliciously [34] It has been both affirmed[35] and denied[36] that trespass is a proper remedy for a refusal to release property claimed as exempt.

36. N J.—Briggs v. Bell, 8 N.J L J. 251.

Trover. Trover is a proper form of action against a sheriff or his indemnitors where sheriff seized[37] or sold[38] the property of one person under process against another, seized mortgaged chattels in the possession of the mortgagee,[39] seized exempt property,[40] refused to release it,[41] and sold it under his process notwithstanding the claim of exemption,[42] or sold property without giving the notice required by law;[43] and the purchase by an officer at his own sale of goods seized by him on execution may be regarded as a conversion of the property, so as to justify an action of trover against him[44] So, also, where an officer who had attached animals fed them on defendant's hay without his consent, defendant, on being successful in the attachment suit, may maintain trover against the officer for the hay,[45] and, where an officer, by his subsequent misconduct, became a trespasser ab initio, he is liable in conversion for the property seized by him to the same extent as if he had wrongfully taken it in the first place.[46] However, trover is not an appropriate remedy for the injury caused by the act of the sheriff in selling property levied on at a place other than one of those authorized by the statute,[47] by his failure to take a bond with sufficient sureties on executing a writ of replevin,[48] by his taking judgment against a receiptor for property for too small a sum,[49] or by his neglect to take proper care of property seized by him under process[50]

An officer who has attached and sold property under regular process cannot be held liable in trover therefor,[51] although defendant is ultimately successful in the suit[52] Where a sheriff levied on property under executions prior to an assignment for the benefit of creditors by the owner, and after such assignment other executions came into his hands and he claimed the right to apply the unsold portion of the goods to the latter executions, and the assignee in order to procure the release of the goods paid to the sheriff the amount of such executions, the assignee had no right of action against the sheriff as for conversion of the goods[53]

In order to maintain trover complainant must have had not only a property in the goods[54] but also a right to the actual possession thereof,[55] at the time of the conversion. It is not necessary that a conversion by the officer shall have been to his own use.[56]

§ 148. Conditions Precedent

Conditions precedent to the right to maintain an action against the sheriff or his indemnitors must be performed before the action may be instituted, but the plaintiff will not be called on to perform any act as a condition precedent which is not clearly made such by statute, or is not required in the interest of justice and would serve no useful purpose.

Conditions precedent to the right to maintain an action against a sheriff or his indemnitors must be performed or complied with before the action may be instituted.[57] However, plaintiff will not be called on to do or perform any act as a condition pre-

Where plaintiff agreed with sheriff, in consideration of the latter not retaking defendant who had escaped, that plaintiff would not sue the sheriff without notice, and reasonable time to retake, it was held that he could not sue without such notice.—Powers v. Wilson, 7 Cow., N.Y., 274.

cedent which is not clearly made such by statute,[58] or is not required in the interest of justice and would serve no useful purpose.[59] Thus, where the sheriff sells property belonging to a person not named in the writ with full knowledge of such person's rights therein, a demand by such person is not a condition precedent to an action against the sheriff,[60] and it has been held that an attaching creditor need not, before suing an officer, go through the useless formality of demanding attached goods which the officer released and did not afterward take possession of [61]

Demanding copy of warrant. A statute providing that no action shall be brought against any constable for anything done in obedience to any warrant until demand has been made for a copy of the warrant will be given effect in cases wherein it is applicable,[62] but it does not apply where the constable did not act in pursuance of the warrant,[63] or the warrant does not constitute a defense, excuse, or justification for the acts or conduct complained of,[64] as where the sheriff levies on the property of a person not named in the warrant [65]

§ 149. Defenses

A sheriff who is sued for an act done by him has the right to take on himself the conduct of the defense and set up such proper defenses as he has, and, where suit is brought by a person other than the plaintiff in the process in question, matters which would be available to such plaintiff are available to the sheriff.

A sheriff who is sued for an act done by him has the right to take on himself the conduct of the defense,[66] and set up such proper defenses as he has,[67] notwithstanding he has been indemnified by the party suing out the process;[68] and, where the suit is brought by a person other than plaintiff in the process in question, matters which would be available to such plaintiff are available to the sheriff,[69] but in an action by a mortgagee, the fact that he has other security is not a defense;[70] and in an action by a conditional seller, a tender of money to him is not a defense where it was not timely[71] or of the full amount owing.[72] In an action by plaintiff in the process for failure to execute or return the process, the officer may defend on the ground that his omission was due to the conduct or instructions of plaintiff or his attorney,[73] but not on the ground that delay was requested by the attorney for defendant in the process, where the attorney for plaintiff refused to consent to the delay and insisted that the sheriff should proceed [74]

Where the action is against indemnitors, they may avail themselves of any defense which would be available to the sheriff if no bond had been taken.[75]

§ 150. Jurisdiction and Venue

The question what particular court has jurisdiction of an action against the sheriff or constable for official default or misconduct is generally governed by statute.

The question what particular court has jurisdiction of an action against a sheriff or constable for official default or misconduct is generally governed by the statute.[77] Under some statutes an action against a sheriff or constable for a neglect of duty with respect to the execution of process is properly brought in the county in which the judgment was rendered or the proceeding had pursuant to which the process issued, even though the sheriff or constable is an officer in another county,[78] but the remedy is not necessarily to be sought in the court from which the process issued,[79] and under other statutes such an action must be brought in the sheriff's own county,[80] although the process issued from a court of another county.[81] Sometimes a certain court is considered as the same court when sitting in any county in the state, so as to permit an action against a sheriff for neglecting to return an execution to be maintained in a county where either party dwells.[82] Under some statutes an action against a sheriff or constable for official misconduct must be tried in the county where the cause of action arose;[83] but the limitations contained in such statutes thereof must be observed.[84] It has been held that an action of debt against the sheriff for an escape is a transitory action so that plaintiff may lay the venue in any county he pleases.[85]

§ 151. Time to Sue and Limitations

a. Time when action may be commenced
b. Time within which action must be commenced

a. Time When Action May Be Commenced

An action against a sheriff or constabe may be brought at any time after the right of action arises and before it is barred by the statute of limitations.

An action against a sheriff or constable may be brought at any time after the right of action arises and before it is barred by the statute of limitations.[86]

For delivery of, or failure to deliver, property. Where the property of defendant in replevin is taken by the officer and delivered to plaintiff without authority of law, defendant may sue the officer at once,[87] or he may elect to abide the result of the replevin suit.[88] Also an officer who has seized property under a writ of detinue may be sued at once on his failure to comply with a statute requiring him to turn the property over to defendant after the failure of plaintiff to give a forthcoming bond;[89] but, where an officer would not be justified in turning replevied property over to either party to the replevin action until the merits of that action have been adjudicated, a suit against him for not delivering the property to one party may not be brought while an appeal from a dismissal of the replevin action is pending.[90]

Before or after return day of writ. It has been held that an action for failure to pay over money collected on a writ, or on a sale under a writ, cannot be brought until after the return day of the writ,[91] at least where no demand on the officer has been made,[92] but there is also authority for the view that, where a sheriff who has collected money on a writ refuses to pay it over on demand, an action may be brought against him before the return day.[93]

During pendency of attachment or trustee proceedings. Where goods in the possession of a mortgagor are attached and the mortgagee is summoned by a trustee writ, an action by the mortgagee for conversion[94] or wrongful attachment[95] is premature when it is brought while the attachment is still in force and before the officer has been discharged as trustee, but the pendency of an action in which property was attached presents no obstacle to an immediate suit by the owner against the sheriff for improperly selling the property,[96] and, where a deputy sheriff, having collected money on execution, was summoned as trustee of the execution creditor, the pendency of the trustee proceedings does not suspend the right of the execution creditor to commence an action on the case against the sheriff for refusal to pay him the money on demand.[97]

A former sheriff may be sued in his individual capacity after he has gone out of office.[98]

On indemnity bond. A claimant of property sold under execution may commence action against the obligors in an indemnity bond immediately after they have become liable.[99] The action may be brought as soon as the injury is inflicted.[1]

b. Time within Which Action Must Be Commenced

Statutes providing special periods of limitation for actions against sheriffs or constables will be given effect.

Statutes providing special periods of limitation for actions against sheriffs or constables will be given effect.[2] Such statutes obviously do not relate to actions based on conduct of the sheriff which is entirely within the sheriff's authority, since such conduct would not be actionable in any case.[3] It has been held that such statutes relate to actions based on actionable unlawful conduct of a sheriff and pose for the courts the problem of drawing a line between unlawful conduct sufficiently close to being "official" to be treated as such in applying the short period of limitations and unlawful conduct which is so far from being "official" that for the purposes of the statute of limitations it is treated like that of an ordinary nonofficial person.[4] In drawing such line the intent, purpose, and knowledge of the sheriff is to be considered and may be the controlling factor.[5] Thus, it has been held that the short period of limitations provided by such a statute does not apply if the sheriff, when engaged in his unlawful conduct, knew that he was not acting officially, that is, did not have an intent or purpose to carry out his official duties.[6]

Acts done in obedience to warrant

(1) The statute, providing that an action against a constable for an act done by him in obedience to a warrant must be commenced within prescribed time after constable's commission of act, should be construed favorably to constable if he endeavors in good faith to carry out what he reasonably believes to be authority granted him in his warrant, and, where a constable does not act strictly in obedience to his writ, but does not act willfully or fraudulently but in good faith, an action must be brought against him within the period provided by statute, but, where constable willfully makes a false return or commits a fraudulent act in executing a warrant, he is individually liable, since he is not acting in obedience to warrant, and warrant furnishes no authority for such act, and statute does not apply—Smith v. Houghwot, 1 A 2d 517, 132 Pa Super. 501.

(2) Such statute applies to civil actions only—Commonwealth v Dempsey, 22 A 2d 76, 146 Pa Super 124.

(3) Under a statute providing in one section that no action could be brought against a constable or any person "acting by his or their order, and in his aid, for anything done in obedience to any warrant," until certain statutory conditions had been complied with, and providing in another section that no action should be brought against a constable or person "acting as aforesaid" unless commenced within prescribed time, the words "acting as aforesaid" referred to a person acting by the constable's order and in his aid, and did not refer to constable so as to subject a constable, more than prescribed time after his commission of an act, to liability for his act done in good faith but not strictly in obedience to warrant—Smith v. Houghwot, supra—Mellick v. Osterstock, 11 Pa Co. 82

On the other hand, if the sheriff, although acting unlawfully, did not know he was acting outside his official authority and intended in good faith to carry out his official duties, the short period of limitations applies.[7]

Such statutes have been held not applicable to actions against sheriffs and constables to recover money collected by them or in their official custody,[8] actions based on contracts entered into by the sheriff for his own convenience and not in his official capacity,[9] or actions for acts done merely colore officii, and not virtue officii;[10] and they do not protect the obligors in a bond of indemnity given to the officer in respect of the act complained of.[11] An action against a sheriff for a false return of a fieri facias, being founded on a judgment, is within a statutory provision that no statute of limitations shall ever be pleaded as a bar, or operate as such, to any action founded on an instrument or contract in writing, whether it is sealed or unsealed.[12]

Action for escape. A statute limiting the time for bringing suits against sheriffs for escapes of persons imprisoned on civil process applies as well to escapes after arrest and before commitment[13] as to escapes after commitment;[14] but a statutory limitation of time within which an action may be brought against bail is not applicable to an action against a sheriff for an escape.[15]

§ 152. Parties

a. In general
b. Joinder

a. In General

General rules governing the persons who may or must sue have been applied in actions against a sheriff or his indemnitors, and an action for neglect of an officer to return an execution must be brought in the name of the execution plaintiff.

General rules governing the persons who may or must sue, as discussed in Parties §§ 3-16, have been applied in actions against a sheriff or his indemnitors.[16] An action for the neglect of an officer to return an execution may[17] and must[18] be brought in the name of the execution plaintiff, although he was a mere nominal party, without any interest in the execution.[19] Where goods purchased by an individual are afterward seized as the property of the vendor, the purchaser is the proper party to sue for the resulting damage,[20] although the property was purchased on account of and paid for by a firm of which the purchaser was a member.[21]

Cestui que trust has been held entitled to sue in his own name for the damage resulting from a levy on the property held in trust for him under process against a third person;[22] but it has also been held that the beneficiary in a trust deed given to secure a debt due him cannot sue in his own name for a seizure and sale of the property under process against the debtor.[23]

Assignee. It has been held that, where a sheriff, after receiving an execution with notice that the claim on which the judgment had been recovered had been assigned to another person, and was prosecuted at his cost, collects the amount of the execution, and pays it to the nominal plaintiff, the assignee may maintain an action against him in the name of the assignor,[24] but there is also authority for the view that the assignee of an execution may, in his own name, without styling himself assignee, bring an action against the sheriff for money collected on the execution.[25]

Where a sheriff receives money of one of several debtors against whom he has a writ, under agreement to pay it over to the creditor, but neglects to do so, and the debtor is again sued and pays the money, the debtor alone may maintain an action against the officer, and, where the goods of one of several joint debtors are taken in execution and are wasted, he alone may sue the sheriff.

Where a sheriff receives money of one of several debtors against whom he has a writ, under an agreement to pay it over to the creditor, but neglects to do so, and the debtor is again sued and pays the money, the debtor alone may maintain an action against the officer, without joining as plaintiffs the other defendants in the original writ,[28] and, where the goods of one of several joint debtors are taken in execution and are wasted, he alone can sue the sheriff for redress,[29] it not being proper to join the other debtors as plaintiffs.[30] On the other hand, the liability of a sheriff for failure to deliver to the proper parties the money paid him on the purchase price of land sold on partition may be enforced by the parties in interest in a joint action against him, when no objection is made for misjoinder.[31]

(2) Defendants

While, in an action against a sheriff or constable, it may be proper to join as parties defendant other persons who are also liable, nevertheless the suit may be brought against the officer alone.

While, in an action against a sheriff or constable, it may be proper to join as parties defendant other persons who are also liable,[32] such as sureties on the officer's bond,[33] indemnitors,[34] and, except in some jurisdictions,[35] a deputy whose wrongful act is complained of,[36] nevertheless the suit may be brought against the officer alone without joining a deputy,[37] or, in the absence of a statute otherwise providing, against the deputy alone,[38] sureties on the officer's bond,[39] or indemnitors,[40] and, where two or more persons are jointly and severally liable with a sheriff for a wrong, it is no defense, in an action by the owner of the property wrongfully seized or sold against one or more of the wrongdoers, to show that others who are also liable were not joined as defendants.[41] A person may not be joined as a party defendant in an action against a sheriff unless it is shown that he is answerable for the wrong alleged.[42] In an action against a sheriff for damages resulting from his wrongful seizure, it has been held improper and unnecessary to join as a party defendant the purchaser at a sheriff's sale,[43] and in an action against a sheriff to recover specific money or property or the proceeds of a sale, another person is a necessary party when, and only when, the determination and relief sought will affect or destroy his rights, liabilities, liens, or claims.[44] A sheriff in office and his predecessor cannot be joined as defendants in an action for the value of property alleged to have

§ 153. —— Addition or Substitution of Parties

a Addition
b Substitution

General rules governing the bringing in of new parties have been applied in actions against sheriffs, and under some statutes the sheriff's indemnitors may be brought in as defendants.

General rules governing the bringing in of new parties, as discussed in Parties §§ 72–84, have been applied in actions against sheriffs[47] Under some statutes, where the action is commenced against the sheriff alone, his indemnitors may be brought in as defendants,[48] if a complete determination of the action pending before the court cannot be had without their presence,[49] but in such case the sheriff remains a necessary party to the action[50] It has been held that a sheriff may invoke the broad powers of a court of equity to make the obligors in a forthcoming bond parties defendant.[51]

Intervention General rules governing the intervention of parties, as discussed in Parties §§ 53–71, have been applied in actions against a sheriff.[52]

b. Substitution

(1) In general
(2) Indemnitors

(1) In General

Under a statute so providing the party in whose favor process issued may be substituted as defendant in an action against the sheriff for alleged wrongful seizure under such process, and in an action against a sheriff and his deputy as individuals it has been held that the sheriff's successor in office may not be substituted.

Under a statute so providing the party in whose favor process issued may be substituted as defendant in an action against the sheriff for an alleged wrongful seizure under such process;[53] but the granting of permission to substitute is discretionary with the trial court.[54]

Successor in office. In an action against a sheriff and his deputy, as individuals, for an unlawful seizure of property, the sheriff's successor in office is not liable so as to be properly substituted by defendants, against plaintiff's will, on the expiration of their terms of office[55]

Substitution of sheriff. In an action against a justice of the peace to recover a deposit, a sheriff who has levied, but not returned, an attachment or execution on the money may properly be substituted as a party defendant[56]

(2) Indemnitors

Under a statute authorizing or permitting the substitution of the sheriff's indemnitors as defendants in an action against the sheriff, such an order of substitution may be granted on proper application, and on substitution they are liable to the same extent as the sheriff.

Some statutes are construed not to authorize an order of court substituting indemnitors of a sheriff as defendants in an action against the sheriff;[57] but under a statute authorizing and permitting such an order of substitution, it may be granted,[58] provided a sufficient application and showing therefor are made[59] by a person entitled to apply,[60] and notice of the application is given to the persons who, under the statute, are entitled to notice.[61] In jurisdictions wherein there are statutes relating to a substitution of indemnitors for the sheriff as parties defendant, whether it shall be allowed in a particular case rests in the discretion of the court,[62] and it is properly refused where it would make it necessary for plaintiff to litigate other questions than those arising between him and the sheriff,[63] or where the damages claimed by plaintiff greatly exceed the amount of the indemnity bond, and the indemnitors claim that the bond fixes the limit of their liability,[64] but it is proper to substitute the indemnitors in place of the sheriff notwithstanding the damages claimed exceed the amount of the bond, where according to the law under which the bond was given the liability of the indemnitors extends to all the injury done and is not limited to the amount specified in the bond.[65] The substitution of indemnitors in place of the sheriff may be granted on his application without requiring him to furnish additional security to answer the final result of the litigation,[66] although such security might have been required of the indemnitors if they had made the application.[67]

After judgment by default Where a sheriff, indemnified as to property levied on, makes willful default in replevin, so that judgment is taken against him, it is proper on motion of the indemnitors to set aside the default and substitute the indemnitors as defendants and allow them to defend;[68] but a motion by the sureties on an indemnity bond to set aside a judgment rendered against the sheriff by default, and to permit them to come in and defend, is properly denied where it appears that the action against the sheriff was pending about eight months before judgment was rendered and that the judgment was paid and satisfied of record before the motion was made and there is no proof of collusion and no disclosure as to the proposed defense.[69]

Effect. Where the indemnitors of a sheriff are substituted as defendants with their own consent and the consent of the other parties, by an order of court providing that they shall be responsible for the acts of the sheriff on the levy and for his other acts with respect to the matter, their liability is not limited to the amount of their undertakings,[70] but they are liable to the same extent as the sheriff.[71]

Similar practice. Even where there is no formal substitution or intervention of parties, it has been held to be proper practice when a sheriff or constable has notified his indemnitors of the pendency of the suit to permit them to conduct and control the defense in his name.[72]

§ 154. Process and Appearance

An action against a sheriff must be commenced by the service of process on him, but under some statutes delivery to his office is sufficient, and it has been held that in a proper case the county attorney may appear on behalf of the sheriff.

An action against a sheriff must be commenced by the service of process on him;[73] but under some statutes the delivery of a summons to a deputy of the sheriff at the sheriff's office is a sufficient service on the sheriff.[74]

Appearance. In an action against the sheriff or his deputy, where defendant claims that the acts on which the action is based were done in the performance of official duties, the county attorney may, if duly authorized, appear on behalf of defendant.[75]

a. In General

A petition or complaint in an action against a sheriff or constable must state a cause of action, and the common-law rules of construction of pleadings have been applied In certain actions an averment of official capacity has been held unnecessary

A petition or complaint in an action against a sheriff or constable must state a cause of action [76] Under code or statutory provisions requiring the statement of facts to be plain and concise, certainty to a common intent is all that is required in a complaint against a sheriff for official misconduct or default;[77] and in an action against a sheriff for a neglect of an official duty the complaint must allege the particular neglect or omission on which plaintiff relies [78]

Averment of official capacity. In trespass[79] or trover[80] against an officer, or a suit against him for money collected by him on execution,[81] it is not necessary to declare against him in his official capacity. Likewise, it is not necessary, in a suit against a sheriff for the misfeasance of his deputy, that defendant should be described as sheriff [82] Under a statute providing that capacity or relation may be pleaded as a legal conclusion, it seems that it may be alleged in general terms that the acts complained of were committed by a deputy sheriff while acting in his official capacity.[83] At any rate, reasonable certainty in an averment of such matter is sufficient.[84] A complaint or declaration may contain allegations as to the official capacity of the sheriff and yet be regarded as stating an action against the sheriff as an individual.[85]

In action on indemnity bond In an action by claimant of the property or the execution defendant on an indemnity bond, it is not necessary to allege that the bond was returned by the sheriff.[86] It is improper to assert claims for attorney's fees[87] and exemplary damages[88] in a petition in an action solely on an indemnity bond.

Construction. The common-law rule that a pleading will be construed most strongly against the pleader has been applied to a petition in an action against a sheriff.[89] However, where the common law has been abrogated by statute, a rule of liberal construction has been applied [90] Where a recital of facts and a general allegation are in conflict, the former controls.[91]

Demurrer. It has been held that the sufficiency of a writ of execution or a claimant's notice of ownership which is set out in the petition or complaint may be questioned by,[92] and only by,[93] a demurrer.

Cure by pleading of another party Defects in the complaint may be cured by the pleading of another party.[94]

Cure by verdict. A defect or informality in a declaration or complaint which states a cause of action is cured by verdict.[95]

In an action against a sheriff or constable for failure to execute a process, the petition, declaration, or complaint must state a cause of action[96] by alleging the nonperformance of some duty by defendant or his deputy[97] and resulting damage to plaintiff.[98] Where the action is for failure to levy on or seize property, it must be alleged that, during the life of the writ, defendant in the process owned or possessed property subject to levy or seizure under the writ;[99] but, where the action is for not arresting defendant in an execution running against real and personal estate, and, in default thereof, against the body of defendant, plaintiff should allege that there was not sufficient property of defendant on which to levy the judgment, and that the sheriff failed to have the money before the court before the return day of the writ.[1] Matters not constituting the gist or gravamen of the action are not considered important in passing on the sufficiency of a declaration.[2]

Refusal to permit replevin of attached property. A count in an action on the case against a sheriff for refusing to permit one whose property was attached to replevy it is sufficient if it alleges a tender to the sheriff of a bond executed by plaintiff with good and sufficient sureties, conforming to the requirements of the statute, and a refusal to accept it.[3]

Loss, injury, release, or conversion of, or failure to apply, property. In an action for the default or wrongful act of a sheriff or constable or his deputy in losing, injuring, releasing, or converting property which has been levied on or taken under a writ, or in not applying attached property to an execution, or keeping it so that it could be so applied, the petition, declaration, or complaint must state a cause of action[4] by means of proper and sufficient averments of matters essential to constitute a cause of action,[5] but nonessential matters need not be alleged.[6]

Improper sale. A petition against a sheriff for wrongfully selling exempt property under final process, alleging the seizure, the sale, and the filing of an affidavit with the officer showing the exempt character of the property, that it was exempt, that plaintiff was a resident of the state, the head of a family, and not the owner of a homestead, and that the property was of a stated value, is sufficient,[7] although the allegations do not follow strictly the language of the statute.[8] In trespass,[9] but not in trover,[10] the declaration must aver that plaintiff was the head of a family. In an action by an execution debtor against a sheriff for selling land without notice, the complaint need not allege that the sheriff's return that he has given notice is false.[11] Where an action against a sheriff is for the injury done in causing, by his wrongful representations, property seized by him under legal process to be sold for less than its value, it is not necessary to aver that the representations were made maliciously.[12]

Failure to sell property or execute deed. Where the complaint in an action for failure to dispose of property levied on shows a levy on sufficient personal property to satisfy the judgment, and a breach of duty in failing to advertise and sell, it need not also show that the debtor did not have other property out of which the judgment could have been made.[13] A complaint against a sheriff for not executing a deed to plaintiff for property purchased by him at sheriff's sale, and claiming special damages for the failure to get possession of the land sold, is bad without an averment that plaintiff's failure to get possession was caused solely by the want of the deed.[14]

Failure to collect or pay over money. An averment in the petition in an action against an officer for failure to collect the money on fee bills put into his hands for collection that if he did not collect the money it was his own neglect and fault is not sufficient under a statute making him liable "for failing to collect the same when by proper diligence it might have been collected."[15] The declaration in an action against a sheriff for failure to collect a list of militia fines should show the name of each person fined[16] and the amount of his fine.[17] In an action against a sheriff or constable for failure to pay over money collected, the petition, declaration, or complaint must aver the collection of the money,[18] a demand on the officer,[19] a failure to pay over,[20] and plaintiff's right to the money.[21] In an action against a sheriff for money received by him by virtue of his office, the nature of the debt or demand should be so far stated in the declaration as to distinguish it from private debts or contracts.[22]

Improper application of money. Where a sheriff, having two executions in his hands, one against plaintiff and another jointly, and another against the other person alone, levied both on lands belonging to plaintiff and wrongfully applied a portion of the proceeds on the execution against the other person alone, it is not necessary, in a suit by plaintiff against the sheriff to recover the amount so wrongfully applied, to set out in the complaint the judgments on which the executions were issued.[23] In an action against a sheriff for not paying over surplus money arising from a sale on execution, after paying off previous attachments, it is necessary to aver that plaintiff's execution was delivered to the sheriff before he paid over the surplus money to the debtor.[24] Where a complaint against a sheriff for misappropriation of a surplus arising on a sale of land under a senior mortgage averred that plaintiff was a junior encumbrancer, whose mortgage had been foreclosed, and that his claim was in the form of a sheriff's certificate of purchase, that the suit to foreclose the senior mortgage was brought subsequent to his purchase, that he was a party thereto, and that the court therein decreed that he held the next oldest lien on the land, evidenced by such certificate, and was entitled to redeem within a year, these averments are sufficient to raise the question of priority of liens, without setting out all the steps by which plaintiff's lien was acquired.[25]

Acceptance of defective or insufficient security. A complaint in an action against a sheriff for taking an insufficient surety on a replevin bond must, in addition to alleging the insufficiency of the surety,[26] aver that the principal was insolvent or unable to pay;[27] and in an action against the sheriff for taking a bail bond insufficient because not in proper form, the declaration should aver that the principal failed to appear in the original suit.[28] In an action for an injury caused by sheriff's alleged negligence in releasing property on an insufficient undertaking as altered by him, a complaint has been held insufficient in the absence of an allegation that the sheriff was the agent of plaintiff or of anyone for the purpose of altering the undertaking or consenting thereto.[29] In order to bring the case within a statute, averments appropriate for that purpose must be made.[30] A petition alleging proceedings by attachment, and levy thereunder, and the release of the property by the sheriff on a void replevin bond, the loss of plaintiff's lien on the property, and that it had been removed by the debtor beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and that the debtor was insolvent, whereby plaintiff had lost his debt, is sufficient on demurrer.[31]

Failure to return process or bail bond. In an action for failing to return an execution, although there is authority to the contrary,[32] it has been held that it is not necessary to allege damages,[33] or that the officer's fees were paid,[34] but it is necessary to allege that the sheriff violated his duty by not making a return on the writ on the return day thereof.[35] In a declaration for not returning a bail bond with the writ on which the officer returned an arrest and the taking of bail, an allegation of such failure is sufficient;[36] it is not necessary to allege a return of non est inventus within one year,[37] an avoidance of the principal,[38] or that the oath necessary to authorize an arrest was taken[39]

Escape. In an action against a sheriff or constable for an escape, the petition, declaration, or complaint must allege that the prisoner was at large beyond the liberties of the jail,[40] set forth the proceedings to, and including the escape,[41] and demand appropriate judgment;[42] but all allegations as to the character of the sheriff as statutory bail should be omitted.[43] In a proceeding against a sheriff as bail, the complaint must contain the same allegations as a complaint in an action for an escape,[44] and also allege that defendant is bail.[45] Where the action is for an escape of a prisoner arrested on mesne process, the fact that the prisoner is indebted to plaintiff must be distinctly alleged in the complaint.[46]
